

Desert Region in Soviet Central Asia Struck by Quake Stronger Than Italy's

MOSCOW, May 17 (AP) — A severe earthquake struck a desert area of Soviet Central Asia today and caused serious damage in a number of places, Soviet officials reported.

The three largest cities in the region—Tashkent, Bukhara and Samarkand—reported no casualties and virtually no damage, but communications were cut with the gas-field town of Gazli and some other small communities that received the brunt of the quake's force. The gold-mining center of Zarafshan is also in the area.

The New York Times/May 18, 1976
Epicenter was said to be north of Gazli (cross).

The earthquake, centered in the Kizilkum mountains range, 300 miles west of Tashkent, was more powerful than the one that devastated parts of northern Italy early this month.

[In Washington, the Geological Survey said the tremor had reached 7.2 on the Richter scale. A quake with a reading of 7 is capable of widespread heavy damage. The Italian quake, in which more than 800 are known dead, registered 6.5 to 6.9.]

The Tass press agency said "prompt measures are being taken to eliminate the aftermath of the quake and to give relief to the quake victims."

Seismology officials in Tashkent said Gazli, which has a population of 8,000, was unreachable by telephone and the Tashkent seismic station said communications with Gazli were cut when the quake struck. The town was damaged by an earlier quake on April 8.

Residents and visitors to Tashkent told friends in Moscow by phone that they had felt the tremor but there was no apparent damage in the city, which was devastated by a quake 10 years ago. Buildings in Tashkent were heavily reinforced in the rebuilding program.

A duty officer in the Bukhara mayor's office said the only sign of today's quake there were cracks in some buildings.

The first official report came over the Moscow radio some six hours after the tremor was recorded. Tass later issued two brief items on an urgent basis, mentioning victims for the first time. The Soviet press usually plays down natural calamities, so the report of heavy damage and victims hinted at the seriousness of the situation.

At Contact of Two Plates

The earthquake that struck in Soviet Central Asia was probably caused by the same forces that have shaped the Himalayan Mountains, according to scientists of the United States Geological Survey.

Although American scientists have not yet communicated with Soviet scientists, they noted that the center of the quake, 300 miles west of Tashkent, was in the area of known cracks in the earth's crust, or faults, that are associated with the movement of the Indian continental plate against the Asian plate.

These movements are what cause the continents to shift positions over the ages and they are associated with most earthquakes.

The American scientists said the earthquake region in the Soviet Union had been quiet for at least a century until a strong tremor hit on April 8, registering 6.8 on the Richter scale. That quake was reported to have caused widespread damage.

Giscard Arrives for Talks With Ford

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 17—President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing of France flew here today in the world's newest, fastest airliner to celebrate America's oldest alliance.

He left Paris at noon, local time, and arrived at Andrews Air Force Base just before 10 A.M. Washington time, on the Concorde, which will begin regular daily service to Dulles International Airport next Monday. It was at the French President's request that the start of commercial service was delayed until after this week-long state visit to the United States so that he could dramatize the initial flight.

It is the first American visit by a French President since George Pompidou came in 1970 and was booed and shunned by demonstrators angered at France's pro-Arab policy. Relations cooled for several years after that.

President Ford and other officials met Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and his wife on the White House lawn, with full honors. The two leaders exchanged reminders of the historic ties that are the main theme of what a spokesman for the Elysée Palace has called a "symbolic visit" for America's Bicentennial.

Afterward, they held the first of two working sessions. The French spokesman said they discussed global problems including East-West relations and détente, negotiations between industrial and developing countries, particularly Africa, and the progress of recovery from recession around the world.

No specific agreements were expected, although Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was known to be eager to secure President Ford's approval for a new European-American development fund for Africa. But the issues reflected the joint view that there are no longer strident problems between France and the United States.

Later, a State Department official said Mr. Ford considered the French President's African plan extremely creative, and that there would be discussions on it.

The American side said the two also discussed Lebanon and United States-European ties. These relations have been an issue of growing worry to the Europeans as they listened to campaign oratory and wonder about America's future intentions.

Tomorrow, according to the American official, they will talk about nuclear proliferation, presumably including French sales of atomic plants, defense and American-European economic relations.

Mr. Giscard and Mr. Ford will meet for talks again tomorrow morning, but otherwise the French President's visit will be devoted to public ceremonies and gala parties, including a White House dinner tonight and a dinner for President and Mrs. Ford at the French Embassy tomorrow.

Mr. Ford said that the "French-American relationship—entering its third century—stands out as an enduring symbol of common dedication to freedom, to the rights of man and to the increased well-being of our peoples in a more peaceful and prosperous international environment."

"Close cooperation is more crucial than ever," Mr. Ford said.

In his reply, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing said: "We are fully aware of the role you played in defending our liberty. The French people have not forgotten. They thank you for it."

"The real secret of our understanding springs from the principles which have inspired it," he said. "Both countries have shown without a break and sometimes in dramatic circumstances an identical passion for independence and liberty."

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger received a group of French officers for a background briefing in which such attitudes were discussed. Americans were excluded, except for former White House spokesman Pierre Salinger who now lives in France and who arranged the list of French reporters to be invited, according to the State Department spokesman.

The plane took just under four hours, instead of the usual eight hours, to fly from Paris to Washington on a route that swept northeast over the English Channel, south past Newfoundland, and crossed the American coast a little below Philadelphia.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing sat in a forward compartment wearing a pale blue cashmere pull-over and an open-necked blue shirt, putting on his jacket and tie before landing. Anne-Aymone Giscard d'Estaing, his wife, had a hatbox by her seat, part of the carefully chosen wardrobe she brought so as to display a different French fashion at every appearance.

Among the special occasions today were a visit to Arlington Cemetery this afternoon, where the French President laid a bouquet of violets on the grave of John F. Kennedy, a reception where he was made an honorary member of the Society of Cincinnati, descendants of Frenchmen who fought in the American Revolution, and the award of the Key to Washington by its Mayor, Walter E. Washington.

Tomorrow, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing will address a joint session of Congress.

One of France's Bicentennial gifts to the United States, a sound and light production at Mount Vernon, is to be inaugurated in the presence of the Giscard d'Estaing and the Ford's Wednesday night. Visits to Philadelphia, Yorktown, Houston and New Orleans are also on the itinerary, with a charity ball winding up the visit in New Orleans Friday night.

New Move on Rhodesia Is Urged by South Africa

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

CAPE TOWN, May 17—South Africa's Foreign Minister appealed today for a fresh diplomatic initiative by non-Communist nations to avert the "blood bath" in Rhodesia that he predicted would result if the initiative remained with the insurgents.

Speaking in Parliament, Foreign Minister Hilgard Muller said South Africa was prepared to open discussions with other governments interested in diplomatic moves to resolve the impasse between black nationalists and the white minority government of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith.

Such an initiative, he said, "should come before it is too late to prevent the radicals triumphing in Africa and making it possible for Russia and Cuba to turn Africa into a blood bath."

Without saying so explicitly, Mr. Muller indicated that the United States could play a pivotal role in resolving the crisis. He described the meeting in Washington last week between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Ambassador R. F. Botha as "fruitful," and he hoped that the meeting would lead to "further discussions on a higher level."

Ford Comments Noted
The minister's remark came as newspapers here gave prominence to reports that President Ford was ready to meet with Prime Minister John Vorster and with Mr. Smith in an effort to promote a Rhodesian settlement. The report said Mr. Ford had raised the possibility in a television interview.

"This we must naturally welcome heartily," Mr. Muller said in response to questions in the Senate.

Defending South African policy, Mr. Muller said the Government had cooperated in previous efforts to promote a peaceful settlement. However, he said, it was firm policy not to interfere in the internal affairs of Rhodesia.

The minister's remarks fell into the context of a controversy that broke out here last week after a senior government official was quoted in The New York Times as having said that South Africa would not under any circumstances intervene militarily to uphold the Smith Government.

The official, Eschel M. Rhoades, the Secretary of Information, later issued a qualifying statement saying that while it was current government policy not to become militarily involved in Rhodesia, the policy could change as conditions evolved. Diplomatic sources believe that the Government, while hewing to a neutral policy in public and refusing to impose economic sanctions, has privately exerted pressure on Mr. Smith to accept a transition to majority rule.

Private Pressure Seen
Mr. Smith's refusal to accept majority rule within a two-year period led to the breakdown in March of his talks with Joshua Nkomo, the leader of the moderate faction of the African National Council, the black nationalist movement. Since the breakdown, guerrilla activities in Rhodesia have increased, prompting Mr. Smith to mobilize Rhodesia's army reserves.

Mr. Vorster himself mentioned Rhodesia in a statement earlier in the day in the Assembly, the lower house of Parliament. Without mentioning Mr. Rhoades's remarks, he asserted that South Africa was "not involved in the internal dispute between black and white Rhodesians."

White House Denies Plans
WASHINGTON, May 17—President Ford has no plans to meet with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa and Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia, the White House said today.

Ron Nessen, the President's spokesman, described as "rubbish" news accounts from Cape Town to the effect that the South African Parliament had been told officially of the possibility of such a conference.

Mr. Nessen said the account evidently was based on what he called a "very vague" reply by Mr. Ford to an interviewer's question last Saturday in Michigan. The President was asked whether he would meet with the leaders of the two white minority governments.

"If, at some point, it would seem wise to meet with the two heads of Rhodesia and South Africa I would certainly consider it," Mr. Ford responded.

Mr. Nessen said the remark was hypothetical and not meant to signal any desire by the President for a meeting.

Salim Jalloud, left, Prime Minister of Libya, and Yasir Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, after conferring yesterday in Lebanon in attempt to mediate in the fighting.

Seeks Role as Mediator in Lebanon

Major Jalloud today saw not only Kamal Jumblat, the Druse who is the dominant figure in the leftist-Moslem alliance, but also leaders of the Palestinian "Rejection Front," the commando organizations that reject all thought of a negotiated Middle Eastern settlement. The "rejectionists" see themselves as the principal target of the Syrian intervention here. They have accused Syria of wanting to eliminate them so as to have a free hand to embark on what they call an Egyptian-type policy of accommodation with the United States and Israel.

Major Jalloud returned to Damascus late tonight to report to Mr. Assad on his meetings with the Palestinians and the Lebanese leftists. Libya's motives in stepping in at this time are far from clear. One explanation advanced by specialists here is that Muammar el-Qaddafi, the leader of the Libyan junta, wants to ease the tension between Syria and all the Palestinian factions as a step to halt a reconciliation that has begun between the Palestinians and Egypt's President, Anwar el-Sadat.

The Prime Ministers of Syria, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait are scheduled to meet in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, Wednesday. It will be the first high-level meeting between Syrian and Egyptian officials since Egypt signed the second Sinai disengagement agreement with Israel last September.

House Votes to Establish Panel on Helsinki Accords
WASHINGTON, May 17 (AP)—The House voted final Congressional approval today to a bill setting up a commission to monitor and report back on Soviet compliance with humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki accords signed last summer.

The measure would set up a commission on security and cooperation in Europe, composed of eight members of Congress and three Administration representatives, to monitor compliance by all signatories of the humanitarian provisions of the accords.

5 Set Out From Tralee For U.S. in Open Boat

TRALEE, Ireland, May 17 (AP)—A Briton and a crew of four set out in a leather boat tonight, hoping to prove that an Irish monk discovered the New World nine centuries before Columbus.

At ebb tide at this southwestern Irish port, Timothy Severin, a 35-year-old explorer and author, steered his 36-foot vessel into Tralee Bay to begin his 4,000-mile voyage. The crew of the Brendan pushed off along the route that legend says St. Brendan and his monks took to America around 565 A.D.

The Brendan's hull is made of the hides of 42 oxen, and its sail is made of goats' skins.

The course leads through the Aran Islands via other Irish and Scottish islands, to the Faroes, Iceland, Greenland and the Canadian maritime provinces to Boston, which Mr. Severin hopes to reach by mid-October.

Israeli Soldiers Kill an Arab Youth on West Bank

 student by Israeli soldiers in Nablus. Both that incident and the shooting today are being investigated by military authorities.

It was also announced that Clara Guinness, a 32-year-old immigrant from Colombia, died last night of the wounds she received two weeks ago in a bomb explosion in downtown Jerusalem. Mrs. Guinness was one of 30 people wounded in the attack, for which a Palestinian guerrilla organization in Beirut took responsibility. Mrs. Guinness had given birth to a baby nine days before the explosion.

In Nablus, thousands of residents thronged the streets waving Palestinian flags, chanting slogans and shouting "murderers" at Israeli soldiers on patrol. Heavy reinforcements were called in and beat back the crowds with baton charges and water cannon.

All the shops and schools in Nablus were closed as part of a two-day general strike to protest the shooting yesterday. The young woman, Hassan Lina Hassan Nabulsi, was the daughter of an influential family and a relative of a former prime minister of Jordan, Sulaiman Nabulsi.

Curfews Are Imposed
 The army imposed a curfew on many sectors of Nablus, the northern town of Jenin and the camp at Balata, where 20,000 Palestinian refugees live in squalid one-story shacks.

In Ramallah, where this reporter spent much of the day, there were demonstrations throughout the morning and afternoon.

Angry crowds of Arabs surged through the streets throwing up stone barricades and setting fire to tires. Black smoke from dozens of such fires drifted across the mountain town.

Trucks loaded of armed, helmeted border police moved through the town, breaking up crowds wherever they could catch them. In one instance, the border guards fought a pitched battle with a mob of 200 high school students. They charged the students into the grounds of the Ramallah Teachers College, picking up the stones that had been thrown at them and hurling them back.

Despite standing orders not to enter schools, the enraged soldiers rushed into the college with their white riot batons swinging. Several persons were injured, including three members of the faculty who tried to block the soldiers at the entrance.

The shooting incident at Kalandia illustrated the problems encountered by Israeli soldiers who lack any special riot training but now are being forced almost every day to battle an aroused civilian population.

The two soldiers involved were driving in an army truck from Jerusalem to Ramallah about 8 A.M. when they suddenly encountered a roadblock across the highway opposite the Kalandia refugee camp. A crowd estimated by Israeli sources at 200 descended on the truck, showered it with rocks and shattered all the windows.

Apparently in fear of their lives, the soldiers pulled away. Fifty yards further down the road they passed the Kalandia Vocational Training School, a project of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency. The headmaster, Nabil M. Awad, was standing at the gate with a group of students watching the fighting.

"As the truck raced by I suddenly saw an Uzi submachine gun barrel poke out of the driver's window," Mr. Awad said. "There was a burst of fire and we all dived to the ground. When I looked up I saw that one boy had been hit in the head. The truck never stopped."

The victim was Abdullah Mustapha Haili Hawas, a student whose family lives in the nearby Shuafat refugee camp. Mr. Awad said that neither he nor any of the boys from the school had participated in the fight against the truck.

The youth was buried this evening in a ceremony at the Mosque of Al Aksa that followed an hour-long funeral procession through East Jerusalem. The several hundred mourners marched through the streets carrying Palestinian flags and flower wreaths.

After the ceremony, several dozen of the mourners clashed with a phalanx of border policemen drawn up outside the walled Old City. The border guards used clubs and tear gas to break up the crowd and ripped the Palestinian flags from their standards.

Landslide Kills 5 in Peru
 LIMA, Peru, May 17 (Reuters)—A landslide apparently caused by an earthquake on Saturday crashed down on a village in southeastern Peru, killing at least five people and injuring 30, official sources said today.

American Woman Charges Torture in Argentine Jail

BUENOS AIRES, May 17 (AP)—An American woman held on charges of subversion since April 30 said that she was beaten and given electric shocks after her arrest, United States Embassy officials said today.

The woman, as identified as Gwenda Mae Loken Lopez, 24 years old, of Minneapolis. She has lived in Rosario with her Argentine husband for more than a year.

Embassy officials said that a consular officer had visited Mrs. Lopez three days after her arrest. They said she reported she was tortured in jail, but they added that her charge could not be substantiated or disproved.

One of Mrs. Lopez's eyes was red and swollen, the officials said, but Argentine authorities said that was caused during a scuffle when she resisted arrest.

The police said that she was arrested while distributing leaflets for the Communist Party on a bus in Rosario.

Salvador Disavows Accused Gun Plotter

By PETER KIBBS
The chief of staff of El Salvador's armed forces was left to defend himself in Federal Court in Manhattan yesterday against United States charges of taking part in a plot to sell 10,000 submachine guns to ostensible underworld buyers.

The Salvadoran Ambassador, Francisco Bertrand Galindo, said in Washington that his Government had had no knowledge of any mission here by Col. Manuel Alfonso Rodriguez, who heads the 4,000-member army as well as air force and navy.

The Salvadoran Government, Ambassador Bertrand said, is seeking official United States reports on the charges, and meantime plans only to observe that the colonel's rights are protected in the court system here. The Ambassador said Colonel Rodriguez would have to get a lawyer on his own, but he stressed that both the United States and Salvadoran systems presumed innocence until a trial decision.

$3 Million Bail Set

The State Department said it had conveyed word of Colonel Rodriguez's arrest to the Salvadoran Embassy on Sunday in accord with consular conventions. Colonel Rodriguez was held in $3 million bail after his arrest in a Mount Kisco rendezvous with five other defendants when he allegedly received a $75,000 payoff for filing a false weapons-export certificate, according to United States Attorney Robert B. Fiske Jr.

A seventh defendant, Dominick Caganese, 46 years old, of 688 Meade Terrace, South Hempstead, L.I., was arrested Sunday night at Kennedy International Airport on his return with his wife from what was called a vacation in Greece.

On his arraignment, when United States Magistrate Martin D. Jacobs set bail at $400,000, Mr. Caganese was described by Assistant United States Attorney Gerald Feffer as a "pivotal individual" in the scheme.

Mr. Caganese's defense counsel, Bennett M. Epstein, charged that Mr. Caganese was being made "a fall guy for an elaborate Government scheme," and had been a salesman of tank, aircraft and automobile parts and sometimes arms to foreign governments.

"Are you suggesting that the Government concocted this matter?" Magistrate Jacobs asked the defense lawyer. "I certainly am, your honor," Mr. Epstein replied. Mr. Epstein is an adjunct professor at St. John's University in Jamaica, Queens, where he is teaching a course on organized crime. The alleged conspiracy involved Colonel Rodriguez's filing a certificate that the 10,000 submachine guns were to be exported for the Salvadoran army, not only permitting their acquisition here but also avoiding a $200 Federal tax on each transfer of such weapons.

Weapons Not Amassed

Instead, the Federal complaint said the weapons—apparently never amassed—were to be sold to buyers in the United States who posed to the defendants as underworld crime figures. Among these was Special Agent Joseph F. Kelly, of the Treasury Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, who said he had made recordings about in Greece.

How so enormous an order as 10,000 submachine guns was made convincing was not explained by any official sources. It would mean at least five guns apiece for the currently estimated members of the five so-called Mafia families in New York City, two and a half for every Salvadoran soldier.

Mr. Caganese, the latest defendant, was described by his counsel as an Air Force veteran who had been a truck driver for Schaefer Brewery for 23 years before becoming operator of DFC Aircraft Sales at 429 Bruckner Boulevard, the Bronx.

This was said to be a subsidiary of Mott Haven Industries at the same address, between Southern Boulevard and East 149th Street. Another subsidiary there is Mott Haven Truck Parts Inc., for which another defendant, Frank G. Alvarez, was described as Latin American representative. Mott Haven officials refrained from comment yesterday.

Mr. Feffer told Magistrate Jacobs that Mr. Caganese traveled extensively, and had been the defendant with special knowledge who told two pending underworld buyers what procedures would have to be followed to persuade the State Department that the guns were Salvadoran-bound.

At one point, Mr. Feffer went on, Mr. Caganese assertedly said that if the other negotiators had difficulty finding an official to sign the needed export certificate, he could easily provide such a person. The prosecutor also told the hearing that Mr. Caganese had suggested the alleged underworld representatives might take an interest in a casino he knew about in Greece.

MARY STUDY HOME CARE

Doctors Say Such Is Justified by Experiment

DR. RONALD K. ALTMAN is "a proper form" for many patients with heart attacks, according to an extensive British experiment over a four-year period.

Two groups of doctors who did not say the results of the care of many patients with heart attacks. The study involved 1,895 men between 60 and 70 years of age who were suffering medical complications during the first few weeks after their attack.

The researchers' conclusions are based on a follow-up study of 1,895 men who had heart attacks in Bristol, Plymouth and Torquay from 1966 to 1970. Ten were excluded from the experiment because they were thought to be at high risk for a second attack.

The experiment itself involved 1,885 heart attack patients. The 454 men who were treated at home died at various intervals up to one year after their attack. The remaining 1,431 men were treated for their heart attacks in hospitals.

The study found that the death rate 28 days after the attack was 12 percent for those treated at home and 14 percent for those treated in a hospital. Over a year, the death rates were 20 and 22 percent, respectively.

The study was headed by Dr. Ronald K. Altmann, a professor of cardiology at the University of Bristol. The study was compared with those reported in other medical journals.

Older patients (over 65) and those with high blood pressure, diabetes, or other medical conditions were also included in the study. The results of the study are reported in the British Medical Journal. The study extended previous findings that they reported in 1971.

The study was controlled—doctors divided the patients into groups with similar medical histories. The results of the study, which differed from the hospital treatment, was based on a random basis. If the results had shown a preference when attention was first given to home care, the doctor who treated an individual patient would be included in the study.

Certain groups of patients were excluded: those who were too ill to be treated at home; those who were too young or too old to participate in the study; those who were already in a hospital when the study began; and those who were not suitable for research conditions to be used in a home care study.

The patient was treated at home if the doctor opened the patient's home care envelope that evening. Patients sent to the hospital were treated in a coronary care unit during the initial post-attack hospital stay. Patients who were not treated at home were treated at the hospital.

The study was a landmark because it showed that home care was as good as hospital care. The report comes at a time when the cost of heart attacks is rising—and other countries are starting to look to the British study for guidance.

Doctors and government officials are seeking ways to reduce the cost of heart care. Critics say Americans should learn from the British study.

American doctors believe the best way to treat a heart attack is in a hospital where they can give 24-hour care and make resuscitations if the heart stops.

American doctors who participated in the British study privately stated that whereas they would like to treat some heart attack patients at home, they were reluctant to do so because of the fear of malpractice suits in case something went wrong.

In the current climate of malpractice litigation, these doctors contend that if the patient died at home, they would be vulnerable to malpractice action because the family might believe that the patient had been neglected because they were not in a coronary care unit instead of at home.

The British study showed that doctors who participated in the study would have been doing a similar study if they had not participated in the study for two reasons.

The British Ministry of Health supported the study that was carried out under the British Health Service. Scottish patients and file malpractice cases as frequently than do patients and lawyers.

Madrid Forbids a Rally Called By Rightists to Honor Franco

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, May 17—The Government dealt a sharp blow today to the political forces to its right by refusing them permission to hold a major rally in downtown Madrid next Thursday.

The National Confederation of Veterans had announced the rally in commemoration of the death of Franco six months ago. Since the announcement a week ago it has published fervent daily appeals in its newspaper, El Alcázar, for all who believe that the death of Franco should not mean the death of Francoism to attend the rally. The planned march from the Plaza Mayor to the Plaza Oriente, where the Royal Palace stands, raised the possibility of a confrontation in the heart of the capital between diehard Francoists and the multitude of political forces left of the Government of Prime Minister Carlos Arias Navarro.

In view of the extreme hostility and fear between the extremes of left and right in this transition period, violent clashes would have been unavoidable.

The Government statement issued this afternoon in response to the veterans organization's application for a permit referred to "risks of disturbances of public order." But to disarm any criticism of its ruling as a slight to the memory of Franco, it larded its declaration with tributes to him.

The Government suggested that the sponsors of the meeting, whose "high-minded motivation" it praised, should either participate in official commemorations that it intends to hold or request permission for a separate veterans ceremony of a different kind.

No plans for an official ceremony have been announced until now.

The official statement set two conditions for any separate commemoration by the veterans: such a ceremony would have to be religious in character and it would have to be held in the Valley of the Fallen, about 30 miles from the capital, where Franco is buried.

A high official of the veterans group said in a telephone interview that he believed the group would abide by the Government order and hold a prayer meeting in the Valley of the Fallen. He cautioned, however, against accepting this as fact until the ruling body of the 600,000-strong organization had met, probably tomorrow.

5,000 Africans Homeless As Lake Nyasa Overflows

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania, May 17 (UPI)—Floods caused by rising waters of 360-mile-long Lake Nyasa have left more than 5,000 Africans homeless and caused extensive damage to crops and property, a Government official announced today.

George Chale, district development director at Kyele, on the shore of the lake, said the floods had resulted from torrential rain, causing the lake to overflow its banks in many areas.

He said the homeless were being housed with relatives or in school buildings. Crops destroyed included vital banana, rice and cassava crops, he said.

Announcing Arrests of 4, Says Mullah Was Slain in a Religious Dispute

ERIC PACE
The New York Times
N. Iran, May 17—

which was given in Government broadcasts and telecasts and reprinted in the Government-controlled press. Officially, at least, the announcement ended the mystery of who had abducted Abolhasan Shamsabadi, the revered Iranian mullah or Islamic religious leader, from near his home in the old central Iranian city of Isfahan last month. The mullah, one of Iran's few religious leaders to bear the high title of ayatollah, was then strangled and his body dumped in a rural ditch. The fame of the victim, and the delay in announcing arrests in the case, had spurred widespread rumors blaming suspects ranging from the mullah's chauffeur to the Iranian secret police, who were said to have objected to statements the arch-conservative mullah had recently made against the secular, modernizing regime of Shah Mohammed Riza Pahlevi. This speculation was reduced, though not eliminated, when the Isfahan prosecutor's office, one of several government agencies interested in the case, reported that the four had confessed. In a news conference, to which foreign journalists were not invited, three of the alleged plotters were reported to have said they had staged the murder "to jolt the clergy out of their self-complacency and high living and make them do something for the nation." This view of the conservative Islamic clergy is shared by many Westernized Iranians who want the country to use its oil revenues of $20 billion a year to press on with modernization. But the Government has let it be known that the four alleged killers were supporters of another archconservative Iranian ayatollah, Mohammed Khomeini, who was expelled to Iraq after fomenting anti-Shah disorders in Iran during the 1960's. The suspects were identified by Seyed Merdi Hashemi, a theology student who claims descent from the Prophet Mohammed; Mohammed Hossein Jaafarzadeh, a geology student; Assadollah Sborizadeh, a seller of kerosene and Mohammed Esmail Eorahimi, a repairer of automobiles.

Bangladesh Protest March On Ganges Diversion Ends

CALCUTTA, India, May 17 (AP) — A Bangladesh march protesting Indian diversion of water from the Ganges River ended today at a border town with no disturbances, the Bangladesh radio reported. Maulana Abdu Hamid Khan Bhashani, the 95-year-old nationalist leader of the march, took his followers up to the town of Shibhanj, three miles from the Indian border and proclaimed the end of the march, the report noted. Mr. Bhashani had called the march to dramatize Bangladesh claims that India's Farakka dam hurts navigation and irrigation on the part of the Ganges river flowing into Bangladesh. At Shibhanj, Mr. Bhashani addressed the thousands who had joined him in the two-day march that had prompted New Delhi to take tight security measures at the border and at the dam.

The Government as Bully Is New Issue in Britain

By PETER T. KILBORN
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, May 16—Harold Healey, the Home Secretary, received two gentlemen tax inspectors a few weeks ago at his Black Cap Pub, a sprawling establishment in northwest London known for its expensive floor shows. Their visit, to check the pub's books, was a normal enough occurrence for many British businessmen. But what followed 15 minutes later was not so normal.

"Five more men burst in," Mr. Healey said. "They produced a search warrant and didn't say what they were looking for. It was like you see on television about the F.B.I. in America. They turned over everything, even the dustbin. They went upstairs to my flat, where I've got a sick mum. They called the police, and they ordered the police off the premises."

The inspectors, Mr. McCafferty assumed, were looking for evidence of tax evasion. He said that he didn't have anything to hide. But as a result of the episode, Mr. McCafferty is one of a number of Britons who are beginning to wonder whether the official agencies of a country that is renowned for a genteel and tolerant civilization are becoming a bit of a bully.

A Troubling Accumulation
It is a spotty trend, and one in responsible positions seriously think it could lead to Orwellian extremes. "To say this is 1984 is a bit melodramatic," Mr. McCafferty said. Patricia Hewitt, head of the National Council for Civil Liberties, said she added that there has been a troubling accumulation of illiberal laws and government practices for a couple of years.

The men who invaded the Black Cap Pub may enter any business, forcibly if necessary, merely by obtaining permission from one of the country's thousands of justices of the peace. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, wants to give the inspectors similar access to private homes. He has proposed legislation, now before the House of Commons, that would also allow tax officials to demand documents from taxpayers' banks, businesses.

Cooper Leaving Post As Envoy in East Berlin
SOMERSET, Ky., May 17 (AP)—John Sherman Cooper said in an interview with a radio station here today that he is resigning as Ambassador to East Germany. Mr. Cooper, who will be 75 years old in August, said he had told President Ford he would resign because he felt it was time for a younger man to take the post.

Mr. Cooper, once a Republican Senator from Kentucky, said he expected to return home to Somerset, in southeastern Kentucky between Oct. 10 and Oct. 15, write his final report and be debriefed. He disclosed his plans in an interview with station WSPC and discussed them later in the day in a television interview on WKYT in Lexington, Ky. He is the first United States ambassador to East Germany and has served in East Berlin since September 1974.

the police bring charges. One prominent case involved Peter Hain, leader of the Young Liberals. Four of 13 witnesses to a bank robbery picked him out of a police lineup, but one of the four could agree on what he had worn. He was found innocent last month after a harrowing 10-day trial and the jury's unexpectedly long, five-hour deliberation.

The lineup became an issue again this week in the case of George Davis, a taxi driver from the East End of London, who had served two years of a 17-year sentence for armed robbery. He had protested his innocence repeatedly and became a cause célèbre in London's Cockney community.

Home Secretary Roy Jenkins ordered him released this week, without as yet exonerating him, after reviewing the evidence. He found that Mr. Davis had been identified in a lineup by five police officers but by not one of 37 civilian witnesses.

A Press Issue
Some British journalists believe that some of their liberties are at risk. This week a local government body, the South Yorkshire County Council, decided to provide full information about its activities only to members of the National Union of Journalists while limiting the smaller, more conservative Institute of Journalists to published documents.

The council's decision not only restricts some journalists' press freedom but also could isolate the council from criticism. The reason is that the council is dominated by the Labor Party, and the National Union of Journalists is a member, unlike the Institute of the Trades Union Congress, the umbrella organization of the biggest British unions and the principal agency with which the Government has determined its latest decisions on economic policy.

As direct participants in those decisions, the director of the institute said, members of the National Union of Journalists are unlikely to question the policies or to expose Labor Party officials to criticism that could undermine party strength.

Communist Guerrillas Kill 15 in Raid in Thailand
BANGKOK, Thailand, May 17 (Reuters)—About 100 Communist guerrillas raided a training camp for defense volunteers in southern Thailand yesterday, killing 15 people and burning their arms before pulling back into the jungle with more than 100 captured weapons.

Ten people were wounded in yesterday's attack in a remote part of Nakhon Sithammarat Province, 750 miles south of Bangkok, Government officials said. The raid, one of the biggest by Communists in the region this year, came as King Bhumibol Aduldej and Queen Sirikit arrived in the province at the start of a tour of the south.

Four main groups — more than 1,000 Thai Communist guerrillas, some 2,000 Malaysian Communist insurgents, Moslem separatists and armed bandit gangs — have been active recently in the 10 provinces of Thailand's southern panhandle.

2 Britons Atop Everest
KATMANDU, Nepal, May 17 (AP)—Two British soldiers reached the 29,228-foot-high summit of Mount Everest yesterday, the Nepalese Foreign Ministry announced today. Sgt. J. H. Stokes and Sgt. M. P. Lane, both 30 years old, are members of a joint British-Nepalese army expedition. They suffered frostbite and are being escorted down, according to a message from the expedition leader, Lieut. Col. Tony Streather.

Vatican Steps Up Campaign Urging Italian Voters to Shun

In a series of statements, Italy's bishops, who are saying that "one cannot be a Christian and a Marxist at the same time," urged Catholics last week to "avoid choices in open contrast with the Christian message."

In a statement, Antonio Cardinal Poma, the Archbishop of Bologna and president of the Italian Bishops' Conference, again stressed what he called the basic conflict between "Marxist ideology and the Christian concept of man."

He added that in countries inspired by Marxist ideology there were serious "limitations to liberty, totalitarianism and oppressive systems, violence and terror and the rejection of free institutions and free enterprise."

The Pope, whose political comments are usually indirect, also made a veiled criticism last week of Catholics who are planning to vote Communist or run as Communist candidates. In a message to a general audience, he said: "Sometimes our most dearest friends, our most trusted colleagues, those who share our table are the very ones who turn against us. Dissent has become a habit, disloyalty almost an affirmation of liberty."

A Grim Choice Raised
The anti-Communist theme was struck last week in L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican's daily newspaper, and in its weekly magazine, Osservatore Della Democrazia, which said that the Italian elections represented a choice between "liberty and dictatorship."

All this, of course, does not suggest that the church's hierarchy is suggesting blind support of the Christian Democrats, who have led governments here for the last 30 years. The Vatican has indicated its unhappiness over the party's failure to develop a new image and to change for the better.

"In the inner councils of the church you do bear some savage criticism of the Christian Democrats," said one priest close to the Vatican. "Many say that the party is destroying itself. But what is the church to do? The Christian Democrats represent the Vatican's own boys and they are in danger of losing."

"The Vatican would like to believe the Communist Party when it pledges belief in a multiparty system and all the freedoms, including religion," he continued. "But the church is worried about internal forces in the party that could take over later and then simply say that religion is the enemy of the people."

As the recent statements suggest, the church is particularly unhappy over the lay Catholics who have agreed to run on the Communist Party ticket as "independent" candidates. This is not a new development, but it is embarrassing in this election, which is regarded as the most crucial since 1948, when the Vatican went all-out to bolster the Christian Democrats and even prescribed the penalty of excommunication for Catholics who supported the Communists.

Several Catholics who intend to support the Communist Party in the June elections, however, said in interviews that they found no difficulty in dealing with what the church regards as incompatibility.

"I go to church and I vote Communist," said a Roman who is active in a Christian trade union organization. "I still have faith. I view Marxism as a way of looking at man and the world, a way to find solutions. I do not accept it as an ideology but as part of history and science."

Catholics on Communist Slate
Similar statements were made by other Catholics, including those running on the Communist slate for the Chamber of Deputies or the Senate. Among the group are men who have been active in Catholic life, such as Raniero La Valle, the former director of Avvenire, a publication of the Italian Bishops' Conference. The independent candidates are supporting the Communists although they are not officially members of the party also include Altiero Spinelli, the Italian who is the European Economic Community's commissioner for industry and technology.

In answer to all the recent statements warning against a vote for the Communists, the party itself has taken a moderate line to avoid any direct clash. With some 12 million voters or about one-third of the electorate, the party has obviously been attracting an increasing number of active Catholics and has long stressed that its success depended on a wide support from Catholics.

About 97 percent of the Italian people have been baptized in the Catholic Church, although, according to some estimates, fewer than 50 percent now go to church regularly.

As a general matter, we take the views of the church into consideration in shaping some policies," said a senior Communist Party official. "We don't want to fight the Vatican or argue with it. We depend on Catholic voters."

An Odd Alliance
The official acknowledged, for example, that the views of the Vatican were taken into account in the party's position on the issue of abortion reform, which is yet to be resolved. At one point this year, the Communists and the Christian Democrats stood together in an unusual alliance against the Socialists, who were demanding a bill that would permit abortion on demand. Party officials often say that Enrico Berlinguer, the 54-year-old Communist leader, has a respect for Catholicism even though he is an atheist. They note, for example, that Mr. Berlinguer's wife is a practicing Catholic.

A crucial question, of course, is just how much impact the views of the church will have in the current campaign. There was a time when word from the Vatican, the bishop or the local priest made a difference, but such influence appeared to have waned some time ago.

The links between the Christian Democrats and the church, of course, go back many years. Often called the Catholic Party, it was created in 1943 by former members of the old Popular Party, which was founded by a Sicilian priest.

In the postwar days of Alcide De Gasperi, the Christian Democratic Prime Minister from 1946 to 1953, the party depended heavily on the church and secular organizations such as Catholic Action to bring voters to the polls. Such proved vital in securing a narrow victory in the 1948 election. Two years ago, the Vatican, as Christian Democrats buffed when against repeating permitting divorce was seen as a Italian political studies.

Accordingly, Democrats can see on the automatic of failure in all office. Another in the election vote, once Catholic, has shrinking with the big cities.

Moreover, Italian changing their longer represent pool of voters on Christian Democrat church could rely their political ads.

The family that changed the world of Hearst forever.

"I must go and give New York the news for breakfast," Sigmund Herzog had said. And for nearly a century, the German-Jewish dynasty he founded kept faith with his dream of rivaling Hearst and Pulitzer—trusting their ideals into headlines, and hiding their secrets and family scandals on the back pages.

Follow eighty-eight years of the Herzog dynasty as set against a background of major social change, the Depression, and two World Wars. "The Herzog Legacy" is the story of a newspaper—and the women who emerge as strong successors to the Herzog line.

De Bloc Official to Run on Italy's Communist Slate

Mr. Spinelli serves as formally called the Commission of the European Communities, since it formulates and carries out policy for the Coal and Steel Community and Atomic Energy Community as well as the Common Market.

Mr. Spinelli was one of a group of prominent Italians, among them Roman Catholic journalists and a filmmaker, who accepted invitations to run on the Communist Party's list. Under the Italian election system of proportional representation, independent, run on the lists of recognized parties.

Mr. Spinelli has been allotted a high position on electoral lists in Rome and Milan, and as a result he is expected to win a seat in Parliament.

The commissioner, who considers himself a nonpartisan European federalist, said he was convinced that the Italian Communists had evolved into a democratic, pro-European party.

Mr. Spinelli spent 16 years in prison under Mussolini. He is a former Communist who left the party in 1937 because he opposed Stalin's purges.

He said bringing the Communists into a coalition government in Rome was necessary to reform Italian politics. He said he believed such a government would probably present a more committed, forceful position in Common Market debates in Brussels than the present one, especially on economic policy and the modernizing of industrial structures.

In opening the election campaign this week, Italy's Communist leader, Enrico Berlinguer, repeated the position that once in government, his party intended to cooperate inside the European Community to build up Italy's limping economy.

The commissioner said he had received "formal guarantees" from the Communists that they would respect his political independence.

states failing to reduce payment errors to levels set by the department. Withholding of $123,423,000 for 45 states was to begin next October.

The cutoff threat, announced in Congressional testimony May 13, would have included a loss of more than $31.9 million for New York, $16.4 million for Illinois, $11.3 million for Pennsylvania, $11.5 million for Michigan and $8.7 million for Ohio.

Welfare waste costs taxpayers $1 billion a year, according to H.E.W. studies.

United States District Court Judge June L. Green ruled in favor of 14 states and Los Angeles County, Calif., which had challenged the department's authority to withhold Federal welfare funds for needy families and the reasonableness of the amounts proposed. Judge Green said she agreed

WELFARE REFORM RULED 'ARBITRARY'

Judge Orders Halt to U.S. Plan to Reduce Errors

WASHINGTON, May 17 (UPI)—A Federal judge has ruled that the Government's three-year effort to reduce welfare errors is "arbitrary, capricious [and] an abuse of discretion," and must be halted, it was learned today.

Under the so-called "quality control" program, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare recently renewed a threat, never carried out, to withhold Federal welfare aid to that welfare error rates needed to be and could be reduced. "It must also be concluded, however, that the tolerance level set must be reasonable and supported by a factual basis and not established in an arbitrary or capricious manner," said the 13-page opinion dated last Friday.

The department had ordered states to cut their error rates to 3 percent for ineligibility payment and underpayment errors by last June 30.

Instead, the rate of error reduction declined from more than four in 10 cases that were ineligible or improperly paid when "quality control" began to a 26.7 percent error rate as of last December, department officials told Congress.

Elimination of all welfare errors is "totally unrealistic,"

Government attorneys argued that H.E.W. had the right to refuse Federal aid to states for payments to ineligible persons or erroneous payments that exceeded those rates. The Federal Government pays 55 percent of the costs of the aid to families with dependent children, an estimated $9.5 billion in the fiscal year 1976.

Judge Green wrote. The court record shows that establishment of 3 and 5 percent levels of acceptable error had been done without adequate study, she said.

Japanese Mark U.S. Bicentennial With Signs, Shirts, Shows, Songs

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times
TOKYO, May 17 — The Japanese, who according to nationalist myth had a bicentennial birthday 2,400 years ago, are marking the United States' 200th anniversary these days with more enthusiasm than many Americans show.

Few people can walk anywhere in Tokyo without encountering signs, seals, stickers, shirts, stationery and songs proclaiming "Happy Birthday, America."

"Lincoln Remembered Fondly" Kimono-clad women carry red, white and blue lunch pails as purses. Commemorative book and magazine issues stream off the presses, while special newspaper supplements run headlines such as "Presidents Lincoln and Grant Remembered Fondly Here."

There are Bicentennial pencils, papers and erasers, and there are cassette tapes of Presidential speeches.

Most department stores plan "America fairs" to sell every kind of American item from football equipment to an antique covered wagon—asking price $9,999. One popular item is a shirt that says, in English, "There are many holiday in the America" and proceeds to list the most important ones, including "Independence Day, Christmas, Lady Day, America Easter and Rincolin's Birthday."

The winter carnival in Sapporo had as a feature the Capitol Building, in ice. A Hilton Hotel brunch offered a San Francisco tableau in butter. The Opera Hotel, not to be outdone, displayed a 6-foot plastic Statue of Liberty, coated with chocolate. Even soy sauce bottles here come in red, white and blue.

There are Wild West shows and Bicentennial birthday-card-drawing contests for children (first prize: a Disneyland trip).

"About the only people not fanatically involved in the American Bicentennial here are the Americans," said Hugh Ivory, the Bicentennial Affairs officer for the United States Embassy.

A Topless Tribute
His assignment is to screen the countless Bicentennial products and projects seeking official endorsement. The Gourmet Club's American Meal Night was approved, but not the Bicentennial topless "Las Vegas" revue "Viva America." The show went on anyway, with bicycle acrobats waving American flags and staccato American and Japanese dancers wearing three-colored hats, among other little pieces of costuming.

"Foreign objects are so fascinating to the Japanese," said Kaname Saruya, a professor of American history at Tokyo's Womens Christian College.

"Foreign things seem so exotic on this island," said the professor, whose United States history-class enrollments have doubled in recent months. "The Japanese have much more interest in the United States than in any other country in the world."

A Real Thrill for Knowledge

Much of the interest, to be sure, is commercial. Japanese corporations or American subsidiaries here, hard-pressed by this nation's two-year-old recession, grasp at red, white and blue straws to buoy business. Some here call 1976 the "Bicentennial year."

But many detect a genuine thirst for knowledge of America. More than a year ago, for instance, Professor Saruya began getting requests for articles exploring everything American from the Civil War to bourbon.

Books exploring American politics, business or social trends sell very well at Bicentennial book counters. The newspaper Mainichi is publishing a thoughtful series on American history.

Enrollments in American literature classes in universities have grown, and a record 800,000 Japanese are expected to visit the United States this year—three times the number of Americans expected here.

Japanese visitors carrying their own birthday greetings to America include a folklore dance troupe, a youth orchestra, a martial-arts group, an Oriental guitar orchestra and groups of stamp collectors and amateur photographers.

Ernest Thompson Seton the American naturalist and author. Forty-six Western paintings from the Amos Carter Museum of Western Art at Fort Worth were shown here. The Whitney Museum is organizing two summer exhibitions of American art.

One group of Japanese women even volunteered to scrub down the Statue of Liberty. Such cleanup efforts are common here at temples. A number of American musicians, including those of the Long Island Youth Orchestra, will tour Japan for the Bicentennial. The United States Army community will donate two buffalo to the Fukuoka city zoo.

Additionally, numerous exhibitions of American art are planned, including a show in Osaka of art work, artifacts and memorabilia from the life of Ernest Thompson Seton the American naturalist and author. Forty-six Western paintings from the Amos Carter Museum of Western Art at Fort Worth were shown here. The Whitney Museum is organizing two summer exhibitions of American art.

For some, of course, the American Bicentennial celebration is just another job. At the Ginza, the "Viva America" topless revue's souvenir cups, license plates, thermos bottles and fire hydrants.

The performance itself includes musical salutes to various states and cities. The Japanese stage cowboys wear pink hats and the ob singing "In your East nat." wear costumes seen in St. Patrick's day.

The energetic pre-draws large crowd stage. Sumiyo Nishida, dancer with heavily eye-lids, took a re bathrobe. "I think" "it is very hard" celebrate the Bicentennial.

The Dunkin' Donuts shop in the Ginza in Tokyo has a coupon promotion centered on the Bicentennial.

Suslov Represents Soviet At East German Congress

EAST BERLIN, May 17 (Reuters)—East German leaders today welcomed Mikhail A. Suslov, a member of the ruling Politburo, as the chief foreign delegate to their ninth party congress, which begins tomorrow. Leonard I. Brezhnev, 69-year-old head of the Soviet party, will not attend the five-day congress, the last of a series held in the Soviet bloc during the past year.

Mr. Brezhnev missed the recent Bulgarian and Czechoslovak party conferences and, although he has appeared in public in Moscow since then, speculation about his health continues.

Radio Waves Beamed at Cancers in a New Study

By JANE E. BRODY

Doctors are directing radio waves at cancerous tumors in an attempt to destroy them without harming normal tissue. The technique is one of several new approaches to treating cancer with heat, a therapy that dates back to Hippocrates in 600 B.C.

Periodically through the centuries, cancer researchers have sought to capitalize on the long-standing observation that cancer cells seem to be more readily destroyed by heat than normal cells are.

In the last decade, various treatment approaches—ranging from perfusing parts of the body with hot blood to encasing the patient entirely in hot water—have been explored in an attempt to find one that is both safe and effective.

Although reports of first attempts in patients have been promising, no method—including the newest one—has yet been subjected to the rigorous clinical tests needed to determine the extent of its usefulness in treating cancer in man.

The new radiofrequency technique, developed by doctors at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Brooklyn, is described in yesterday's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association along with an editorial by National Cancer Institute scientists who called hyperthermia (high temperature) therapy of "great potential clinical relevance."

Radiofrequency therapy, as devised by Dr. Harry E. LeVeen and his colleagues, has been applied to 21 patients with various types of advanced cancers and produced the death of the treated cancer tissue or substantial reduction in the size of the tumor in all of them, the doctors reported. However, no patient was permanently helped by the experimental therapy.

In an interview yesterday, Dr. LeVeen said that the electrical energy at a frequency of 13.56 megahertz (in the range used by short-wave broadcasters) was produced by a large radio transmitter and applied to the patient through electrodes of various sizes and shapes.

The electrodes may be applied to the skin in the area of a cancer beneath the body surface or directly to a tumor that is exposed during surgery. On the basis of studies in animals and patients, Dr. LeVeen showed that when the radio waves were absorbed by tissue the waves were converted to heat energy. In the patients, the tumor tissue was heated to an average of 119 degrees Fahrenheit, more than 20 degrees above normal body temperature and above the temperature that kills normal tissue, the researchers reported.

Dr. LeVeen explained that the normal tissue in the area of the cancer was not heated nearly so high because it was better supplied by blood vessels and blood flow through the normal tissue cooled it more than the cancer was cooled. Thus, the effect of the heat was selective against the cancer, he said.

In the interview, Dr. LeVeen said he was now testing radio-wave therapy in conjunction with immunotherapy (BCG vaccine), since he has found that the heat treatment liberates tumor substances that render the cancer susceptible to attack by the immune system.

In the accompanying editorial, Drs. Joan M. Bull and Paul B. Christian state that "emphasis should be given to investigations of the potential of heat to increase the tumor kill achieved with radiotherapy and chemotherapy," since other studies have suggested that heat potentiates the effects of radiation and anticancer drugs.

The cancer institute scientists said that the "ingenuity and comparative simplicity" of Dr. LeVeen's technique "may allow more widespread use" of heat therapy in cancer. But they emphasized the need for carefully controlled clinical tests to determine accurately what, if any, role heat therapy may have in the future.

In the past, Hippocrates used red hot irons to treat cancer, and in the late 1800's and early 1900's, hot baths and high fevers were attempted as cancer treatments.

In the late 1960's, Italian researchers reported striking reductions in the size of tumors in 15 of 22 patients with cancers involving the arms or legs, which were perfused with hot blood. Bladder cancers have been treated experimentally by flushing the bladder with hot fluid.

And in 1974, Scottish researchers reported the use of hot wax baths in treating terminal cancer patients, most of whom experienced a shrinkage of tumor and relief of symptoms.

Cheating Scandal's Wide Impact Makes Many Changes in Life at West Po

By JAMES FERON
WEST POINT, N. Y., May 17
The lounge in Grant Hall carries pleasant memories for generations of West Point graduates as the site of long-awaited visits with family members and girlfriends. These days, however, it is the scene of more intense encounters between cadets and civilian lawyers engaged by parents seeking to salvage careers threatened by a cheating scandal.

So far, 49 cadets have been officially charged, but many of those accused have produced the names of scores of others they say are equally involved. The scandal, which now includes evidence of jury tampering, has plunged morale at West Point to its lowest point in memory.

A Widespread Problem
Cheating—a violation of the honor code, which says, "A cadet will not lie, steal or cheat or tolerate those who do"—has long been considered more widespread than indicated by the relatively few "found" each year and expelled. Even old graduates concede this.

What makes the current scandal different is the unwillingness of the accused to accept their fate. All second-classmen, or juniors, they have reached beyond the honor committee, regarded by many as an upper classman's club, rather than a quasi-judicial body, to the Army lawyers on the post who are willing to challenge the system.

Cadets also have decided to break tradition by "going public" in seeking protection against what they call criminal harassment as well as a system that they feel rewards deceit. The lawyers have asked Army officials in Washington for a full investigation of the Academy's practices.

All this has created a sense of turmoil at the 170-year-old military institution only a few weeks before graduation. The colorful ceremony is likely to be taking place as the first of the officers' appeals boards convenes, with the trials lasting well into July.

Cadet Leo Cody, a second-classman, reflected on some of the turbulence on the post as he awaited disciplinary hearings for missing a parade a few days ago.

"I'm involved in the cheating business," he explained, "and when they told us we could no longer represent the Corps I thought why should I go to a parade if I can't represent the Corps?"

Obligations Unchanged
Cadet Cody learned that although he had lost some of his rights—restrictions are imposed immediately after a cadet has been charged—his obligations to the Military Academy remained firmly fixed.

"My roommate resigned last week," he continued, when asked about morale. "He was cleared of an earlier honor violation in January and when they put him up for cheating he said, 'What's the use in becoming an officer?'"

West Point officials express little sympathy with cadets found guilty of disciplinary or honor violations, arguing that the system is intended to be stressful and that the codes are intended to strengthen character, honor and integrity. Many cadets at West Point support this view.

But there are others who are saying now that the codes are maintained through fear rather than respect, that "victims" often are selected arbitrarily, that prosecution is pursued through dishonest and illegal means and that the upper classmen and officers have a vested interest in maintaining a system they survived.

Cadet Timothy Ringgold, whose apparent punishment for spreading cheating was quickly reversed on Thursday following publication of the case, said that "roughly one-third of my [junior] class cheated and the other two-thirds tolerated it."

The Phoenix, Ariz., cadet was charged with "toleration" of cheating and transferred to transient barracks, a form of confinement for cadets awaiting their first legal hearing, as prepared for the officer board that could mean his expulsion.

All Charges Dropped
His "violation" of the honor code followed an informal discussion with Undersecretary of the Army Norman Augustine on the subject of the honor code. Four days later, West Point officials said there was "insufficient evidence" and all charges were dropped against the cadet.

Capt. Arthur Lincoln, a West Point lawyer who was threatened with being transferred after defending unpopular cadet cases, had advised Cadet Ringgold not to answer questions of the honor board investigators and not to attend his honor board hearing.

Captain Lincoln was pleased with the official reversal, saying it was the fastest he had ever witnessed. "They were faced with something of a problem," he added, "because if they pursued the question of widespread cheating in order to convict Ringgold, they would have to conduct the investigation we are asking for."

Captain Lincoln also co-confirmed another indication of the official response to the widespread interest in West Point's internal problems. He said he had been told in the last few days that his threat-posed transfer might now be called off.

"I received another call from the 'career management' people in the Pentagon to tell me that while a transfer would be a promotion I would not be called away before the cadet trials ended and that it might be cancelled altogether. It's a top-out," he said, "but I'm happy."

The corridor outside Captain Lincoln's office, as well as that of the other Army lawyers in the Judge Advocate General's department at West Point, looked like the waiting room of a busy hospital during the week.

Cadets who are entitled to legal counsel after the honor board hearings have been stepping forward to discuss their cases, to submit lists of others they cheated with and to present notarized accounts of conversations involving jury tampering.

"It's not whether you are guilty or not, it's who you know on the honor committee," one of the cadets said. Captain Lincoln, a West Point graduate, estimated that 90 to 95 percent of the cheating incidents at West Point went unreported.

The reason for the cheating, most cadets agree, is that West Point imposes extremely severe academic standards, with class rank—and its inherent benefits—after graduation—counting as much for some as simply surviving does for others.

The results are the pattern of cheating that begins in high school and transfers easily to college. "They forget sometimes," a cadet said, referring to the academy, "that we are a cross section of society, with all its good parts and bad parts. Look at the business of smoking pot."

Officers had confronted a group of cadets more than a week ago with reports of marijuana parties, including a recent company picnic on a ferry boat to Constitution Island "where everyone was rolling them," a cadet from North Carolina said. Charges were not preferred because of insufficient evidence, it was learned later.

All Smoke the Stuff
"We all smoke the stuff, usually in the woods," the North Carolina cadet said, "and every once in a while they race those marijuana dogs through the barracks while we're at meals, sniffing for the pot," he said, adding that it was obtained from girls from Highland Falls and from nearby women's colleges.

West Point officials also have been faced with more serious allegations against cadets and former cadets in the two months. A second-classman Lavel McNutt, was indicted in April for rape and robbery in nearby Rockland County and is under investigation by the Army for an earlier rape on the military post.

Yesterday, Pvt. Virgil Campbell, a former plebe who left in January for academic reasons, was arrested at the post's Thayer Hotel and turned over to the civilian police on charges of sodomy and unlawful imprisonment brought by a 19-year-old Yonkers girl. Private Campbell, who had returned to the Academy on a weekend pass from the Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland, is being held without bail in the Rockland County Jail.

Plebes In Dark
The cheating scandal remains the paramount issue at the Academy, however. A second-classman said, "The plebes don't know what's going on. They're just doing what everyone else tells them to do. The yearlings [sophomores] are confused; this whole business may affect them the most."

"The first classmen (seniors) are getting ready to graduate," he continued. "They just want to stay out of trouble and get out of here. My class, we don't know what to think. A lot of our best friends are leaving."

"After graduation when we get the first classmen out of the way and when we're not afraid to say anything because the guy above you is ready to write it up for an honor board, then we'll know. In the meantime, everyone's scared, but that's the way the system is designed."

The lawyers' requests for a complete investigation of West Point, a request that the superintendent, Lieut. Gen. Sidney Berry, has indicated he could tolerate, would include procedures deeply ingrained in the Academy system.

One includes the rights of the cadet honor committee and its investigation methods. The Roman Catholic chaplain, the Rev. Thomas J. Curley, has complained to General Berry, for example, over what he described as the failure of Academy officials to protect the confidential nature of the chaplain's office.

Father Curley, who has long criticized some of the hazing and harassment procedures as brutalizing to young men, was obliged by cadet honor board investigators to disclose the name of a cadet sought as a witness who assisted Cadet Steven Verr to the chaplain's office last August after an incident outside the messhall.

Cadet Verr, who is alleged to have fainted and continuously deprived of food in a traditional plebe hazing practice, burst into tears after a meal and explained this reaction by saying his parents had been injured in an accident.

He was charged with "lying," even though the one witness, an honor board member, had testified that he did not think Cadet Verr had violated the code. Five months of modified detention while his case was being heard was followed by three months of harassment when General Berry overturned the ruling in an unpopular decision.

West Point officials have since denied that Cadet Verr was deprived of food, citing three weighing periods to show he had gained three pounds between July 7 and "early August," or two weeks prior to the fainting and crying incidents.

His charge that his mail was destroyed, returned to the sender and scattered around the post, all traditional harassment procedures as well as apparently Federal violations, was explained by West Point as a mailroom error caused by the erroneous assumption that Cadet Verr had resigned in March. Gerald Verr, the cadet's father, has since said he had received between 100 pieces of mail starting in October, but letters never found.

The cadets who were barracks at night, to call newsmen to telephone booths, to count reports that Academy on a daily to ask occasionally to be done to change the feel is an ultimately system.

One of them reacting up as a boy where you had a leaders—winners, with a large group of plebe and a few other end. The middle those in the middle end up among the at West Point, who cadets are selected as scapegoats—right they might as well quickly because they make it. If they did out, you're out."

West Point graduates made the same point "selected out" survive because of a mous latitude that a men have to "write disciplinary transgressions more serious honor lations.

Each procedure is guarded, but they are felt by cadets to be hands of upper-class officers with an interest taining the system, responding predictable, leged violations.

With penalties expulsion to hours of "punishment tours," ing in full uniform the stakes are as high accused as for the

Stir on the Reservation: Navajos Dispute Rulers

RACE LICHTENSTEIN
MESA, Utah, May 16—

As the dawn of the 1970s, he stirs, among the Navajos, the words of the old Navajo Chant could serve to the mood of the youngest Indian reservation before what may be a tumultuous tribal council Tuesday.

At Mesa, on the northern Navajo Nation; at Crownpoint, N. Mex.; and in Window Rock, Ariz., members are beginning to openly the integrity of the government and are giving more of a say in their. They reflect a new young, highly educated who are coming to the form of government, they say, was imposed on the tribe by the Federal Government years ago.

"This is the first time I've seen anything like this—a real open hearing," said Harris Arthur, an environmental activist from Shiprock. He watched proudly as Navajo shepherders and farmers discussed issues from the floor of the Red Mesa hall with eight councilmen seated on a platform in front of them.

For the last several days, opponents of Mr. MacDonald such as Mr. Arthur, Peterson Zah, head of the legal services office on the reservation; Raymond Smith, and Joe Domingo, both dissident councilmen, have been giving reports and circulating leaflets on the reservation to rally a crowd for the Tuesday protest.

The dissidents intend to demand that the tribal council appoint a "Wassenaar-style" commission to investigate charges of corruption.

Mr. Smith told the Red Mesa crowd that many key agencies—including the Navajo Housing Authority, the Navajo Housing and Development Enterprise, the Navajo Arts and Crafts Enterprise and the Office of Navajo Economic Opportunity—were all in financial trouble. He charged that Mr. MacDonald had made it nearly impossible for people to see audits of those agencies or of the tribe.

Mr. MacDonald said in a recent interview that there was a great need for technical and administrative help for the Navajo Nation, but that its finances were basically sound. He dismissed the dissidents as a "vigilante group." He also said that the Justice Department's investigation was "political harassment" instigated by Senator Barry Goldwater, Republican of Arizona, with whom Mr. MacDonald has been feuding for several years.

However, Mr. Zah said that Navajos would no longer buy that argument.

"The same thing that's happening here," he said, citing the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson's call for a new black activism. "You cannot completely blame the outside white forces for what's happening inside. You've got to clean your own house first."

But he was ordered by United States District Judge W. Arthur Garry Jr. to keep the schools open and to take "all actions necessary" to come up with the money.

The City Council, which must pass the new tax, took a defiant stance, and its members warned of a "taxpayers' revolt."

"It is time a stand was taken against Judge Garry's megalomania," said the City Council President, Louise Day Hicks, a leader of the antibusing forces. "If it means jail for those of us who are willing to stand up for the people of Boston and their pocketbooks, so be it."

The actual cost of the desegregation plan, debated in a courtroom confrontation between the Mayor and Judge Garry, has been the topic of much fingerpointing and a certain numerical vagueness.

The Mayor charged that Judge Garry had given an unwarranted free hand to spending and allowed fiscal mismanagement in the school department. Judge Garry contended that the state and Federal governments had done their share in providing funds.

Today, Mayor White asked for a special tax levy of $16.40 per $1,000 assessed valuation to pay for the added school costs. The tax must be approved at the City Council and, as a home-rule measure, by the state legislature.

The Mayor described the proposed step as "most unpleasant" and "painful for our taxpayers" but said it was more responsible than borrowing the money in the currently expensive municipal bond market.

It also served the political purpose of isolating the apparent desegregation costs from the rest of the municipal expenses, a process Mr. White started several weeks ago with his threat to close the schools after the $184 million school budget was exceeded.

Boston already has the highest property tax rate in the nation, the Mayor said today in making his announcement. The high tax rate, currently $198.70 per thousand assessed value, is largely a result of the presence in the city of many tax-free religious and educational institutions.

The special levy would add $100 or more to most taxpayers' bills and much of the effect would be felt in the home-owning white neighborhoods so vociferously opposed to busing.

The City Council met in court-ordered special session after the Mayor's announcement, but deferred action on the budget. The members spent most of their time denouncing Judge Garry, and they voted to issue him a summons to appear before them on Thursday. Most of the nine Council members have campaigned on their opposition to busing.

Meanwhile, Senator Edward W. Brooke held a news conference to describe his role in opposing a reported plan by the United States Attorney General, Edward H. Levi, to file a friend-of-the-court brief at the Supreme Court supporting an antibusing petition and asking for a review of the Boston case in the Court's landmark, unanimous 1971 ruling supporting widespread busing as a remedy for segregation.

Mr. Brooke, a Republican and the only black in the Senate, said that he learned of the plan last Wednesday from attorneys for the black plaintiffs and immediately called Mr. Levi, other Government officials and Pres-

Boston Mayor Asks Special Busing Tax

By JOHN KIFNER
Special to The New York Times
BOSTON, May 17—Mayor Kevin H. White asked today for a special, one-time property tax to raise $27.5 million to cover the cost of court-ordered busing for school desegregation.

The measure would produce $17.5 million—the amount the Mayor estimated the school budget had gone into deficit—and an additional $10 million to pay for the overtime expenses of the police force.

The Mayor, contending that the desegregation plan was "bankrupting" the city, had threatened to close the schools today.

But he was ordered by United States District Judge W. Arthur Garry Jr. to keep the schools open and to take "all actions necessary" to come up with the money.

The City Council, which must pass the new tax, took a defiant stance, and its members warned of a "taxpayers' revolt."

Mr. Brooke, a Republican and the only black in the Senate, said that he learned of the plan last Wednesday from attorneys for the black plaintiffs and immediately called Mr. Levi, other Government officials and President Ford to voice his objections.

Under repeated questioning, Mr. Brooke maintained that President Ford had left him with the impression that his telephone call was his first inkling of the Justice Department plan, which would reverse the position of the Federal Government and courts over the last 20 years.

He acted as though he had not heard of this at all," Senator Brooke said.

Mr. Brooke said he had warned that the brief might cause further violence by encouraging resistance and demonstrations.

Judge Garry held a series of court hearings on the school budget over the last few weeks, including a session at which he ordered Mayor White to appear.

In the City Council meeting today, the councilors were vowing they would not pass the tax and would stand in contempt of court. If they do not pass the tax, Judge Garry would have legal precedents to order it into effect himself.

Mrs. Hicks announced that she would meet tomorrow morning in Washington with Attorney General Levi and Solicitor General Robert H. Bork to encourage their reported plan to go to the Supreme Court.

What will it take to create new jobs for them?

Money. The huge sums of money investment capital) companies need to upgrade and expand their facilities. It's those facilities that, when business picks up, will create jobs and create new ones.

How much money's needed? The average investment to create a single new job opportunity in manufacturing is around $25,000 today. It will be at least $35,000 in 1980.

That multiplies out to $37 1/2 billion in capital investment today to create 1 1/2 million new jobs. By 1980, it will take an investment of $52 1/2 billion.

Where will that money come from?

The law-writing committees of the U.S. Congress are studying the subject of "Capital Formation."

Here are four tax measures which we believe the Congress should enact to encourage industrial expansion and to create jobs:

(1) five-year capital recovery system; (2) 12% permanent investment tax credit; (3) write-off of the costs of pollution control facilities in the year they are incurred; (4) eliminate the double taxation of corporate profits paid out as dividends.

If you agree that revisions in present Federal tax laws are needed to provide the additional capital for more and better jobs, we ask you to tell that to your Senators and Congressmen.

College in Iowa Flourishes on Meditation

By GENE I. MAEROFF
Special to The New York Times
FAIRFIELD, Iowa — One day last year, someone here at Maharishi International University found a $5 bill and posted it on a bulletin board with a note about where it had been found. It remained posted for several days and everyone presumes that whoever removed the money was the rightful owner.

The strong sense of community that pervades this new institution, which is operated by the transcendental meditation movement, seems to spread into every facet of campus life.

Maharishi International University is a cheerful, optimistic place where people smile a lot and tend to be considerate and trusting. Doors are never locked and the college bookstore is one of the few in the country that sells freshly cut flowers.

Drugs and alcohol are shunned by almost all the 454 students and most say they can get as high as they want simply by meditating. The resulting ambience lends itself to what the students consider healthful living—a ban on smoking and wide interest in natural foods.

"There is no place like this," said Dick DeAngelis, a burly young transfer student from Northeastern University in Boston. "I was doing pot, but when I got into TM and came here I stopped because it would have taken away the clarity I had gained."

Maharishi International University is an outgrowth of the transcendental meditation movement that has been spreading through the United States in recent years, attracting particular attention as it has won supporters among sports and show business personalities.

People at the university, which is named in honor of the leader of the movement, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, believe they are different from their counterparts at other institutions of higher education and they have no doubts as to why.

An Approach to Learning

They think meditation is responsible for lifting their spirits and leading them to greater knowledge and intellectual insight.

"As a result of practicing transcendental meditation," said Robert W. Winquist, a vice president of the school, "a student is more wide awake and perceptive and gets more out of his studies."

A transcendental meditation approach to learning, called the Science of Creative Intelligence, guides the institution's curriculum. The college was created three years ago out of a belief that a school incorporating the philosophy and techniques of transcendental meditation could make an unusual contribution to higher education.

The curriculum, which includes prescribed courses during the freshman and sophomore years, is heavily interdisciplinary.

Courses are organized in modules lasting a few weeks or a few months each, permitting students to study one interdisciplinary area at a time.

Like hundreds of thousands of other Americans who practice transcendental meditation, people at Maharishi set aside 20-minute periods in the morning and again in the late afternoon or early evening for meditation.

There is some group meditation in classes, but most of the meditating is done individually and in the privacy of one's room.

"Some people think that the first thing they will encounter here is a bunch of students sitting under a tree in the lotus position chanting hari krishnas, but it's simply not like that," said Dr. Seymour Migdal, a graduate of the College of the City of New York who is the faculty dean.

More Offshoots Hoped For

Officials of the college, which acquired its campus with a $2.5 million loan from the movement's national headquarters, hope the institution will spawn academic offshoots around the world.

The campus amid the lush farmland of southeastern Iowa was the campus of the defunct Parsons College.

Parsons came into hard times and a great deal of controversy after it was widely criticized in the news media for its aggressive student recruitment policies and its approach to higher education.

Now, the vestiges of Parsons—ancient bronze donor plaques affixed to buildings and gateposts—provide a curious juxtaposition to the posters and pictures of the white-bearded Maharishi Mahesh Yogi that have proliferated on the 185-acre campus.

The installation of a community of meditators on the outskirts of their town has been a source of bemusement to some residents of Fairfield. A petition protesting the school board's decision to let four Maharishi students enter the public schools as observers for an education course was signed by 540 townspeople.

"They say they are not a religion, but a lot of people here disagree," said Mrs. Peggy Checum of Fairfield.

The Rev. John R. Dilley, pastor of Fairfield's First United Presbyterian Church, was one of many residents who defended the college, stating in an open letter that he found the principles of transcendental meditation to be "in no way offensive to the Christian conscience."

Transcendental meditation leaders insist that their movement is not a religion and is compatible with existing creeds. Members of the college's student body identify their background as 39 percent Protestant, 28 percent Roman Catholic and 13 percent Jewish, with most of the rest having no formal family religious background.

The strong feeling of dedication to an ideal found among Maharishi's students is also present among the faculty members and administrators, who are all paid approximately the same base salary of $275 a month.

Additional increments are provided on a sliding scale for those with spouses or children. All faculty members and administrators live free in the dormitories.

"The faculty surely constitute an outstanding feature of the college," an evaluating team of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools said; last year of Maharishi International University. "Generally they are young men and women enthusiastic in their participation with the university, energetic in their work, creative in their vision for higher education and eminently well qualified."

The institution was granted the status of "candidate for accreditation."

What remains to be seen as the school matures and seeks full accreditation is whether its dedication to the principles of transcendental meditation proves to limit intellectual and social freedom.

"Even the most fundamentalistic of denominational schools do not so self-consciously relate doctrine to every component of the curriculum," asserted the North Central evaluators.

E.P.A. Notes Drop In Pollution of By Sulfur Smoke

WASHINGTON, May 17 (UPI)—In an annual progress report the Environmental Protection Agency said today that sulfur dioxide pollution from sulfur dioxide dust had been decreasing some other types of were still troublesome.

The agency reported from 1970 to 1974, the recent full-year average sulfur dioxide emissions increased 32 percent while particulate matter fell 17 percent.

However, some areas fell short of national standards, largely because of sulfur dioxide and dust emissions came from power plants or smelters, it said.

The report said that emissions in carbon monoxide pollution in urban areas of Florida, New Jersey, New York and Washington, but that attainment of standards had been down by the stretching schedules for reducing mobile emissions.

The report said sulfur dioxide emissions from power plants and some industries increased 32 percent while this pollution still did not meet national standards in areas.

Particularly troublesome, it said, was the "photochemical oxidant" group of chemicals that contribute to smog.

These chemicals enter not only from vehicle exhaust but also from other man-made sources such as rural sources as well. Furthermore, it said, emissions by cities can be rural areas more than 100 miles away.

The agency said it is necessary to control industrial sources over wide areas to reduce smog.

F.T.C., Citing a Rise in Smoking, to Check Ads

WASHINGTON, May 17 (UPI)—Reporting that Americans smoked a record 601 billion to 603 billion cigarettes last year, the Federal Trade Commission announced today an investigation to determine whether the tobacco industry was encouraging smoking with unfair advertising.

The agency also recommended in its annual cigarette report to Congress stronger warnings on cigarette packs and advertisements—perhaps to say "smoking may result in your death." At the present the caution reads: "Warning: The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health."

There has been a "sharp increase" in cigarette consumption by women and young people, the report said, because of "changing mores."

The result was that last year Americans smoked a projected 601 billion to 603 billion cigarettes, up from 594.5 billion in 1974, according to the report.

That compares with 584.7 billion in 1973, 561.7 billion in 1972 and 547.2 billion in 1971.

the year radio and television cigarette commercials were banned.

The F.T.C. told Congress that "in order to determine whether there may be deception and unfairness" in cigarette advertisements, it had started an industry-wide investigation.

Among other things, it said, the inquiry will attempt to learn what the industry itself knows about the impact of its ads on "consumers and potential consumers."

Why wait up to 90 days to earn 5 1/4% interest

In 90 days, County Federal can pay you 5 3/4%

County Federal Savings and Loan pays interest on your savings every month — on all accounts, passbook or savings certificate. So you never have to wait up to 90 days to enjoy the interest you've earned.

If you now have a passbook account that requires you to wait till the end of a quarter, County Federal suggests you consider the advantages of a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. You can earn 5 3/4% interest on your savings instead of the 5 1/4% (or perhaps 5%) you now receive. You don't have to tie your money up for a long period of time, because your funds are available to you without any interest penalty every 90 days. (Renewal of your certificate can be made automatic, subject to your approval.)

With a County Federal 90-day Certificate, your savings not only earn a higher rate but your interest is compounded daily. And you can draw your interest every month — or leave it in your account to earn more interest. If your savings and interest remain in your account a full year, your effective annual yield is actually 6%!

Increase the interest you now get every quarter with a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. Minimum deposit — $500.

NOTE: Government regulations require a substantial interest penalty for early withdrawals from Time Savings Accounts. Interest on the amount withdrawn may not exceed the passbook rate, and interest for 90 days is forfeited.

INTELLIGENCE PLAN ADVANCES IN SENATE

WASHINGTON, May 17 (AP)—Senate leaders reached an agreement today to end a low-key filibuster against a proposal to create a new intelligence oversight committee.

The agreement, which set a time limit for debate on all amendments to the proposal, canceled plans to try to invoke cloture, the procedure for cutting off debate.

No limit was set on the number of amendments that could be offered. Therefore, there was no indication when a final vote on the resolution might occur.

The new 15-member committee would have exclusive jurisdiction to monitor activities of the Central Intelligence Agency and would share oversight of other intelligence agencies, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, with other Senate committees.

Mr. Hunt was not prosecuted in that case. He was, however, prosecuted in the Watergate break-in case and served as a government witness in both the plumbers trial and the Watergate cover-up trial.

The all-747 airline across the Pacific.

There are some things the map doesn't tell you about our Pacific schedule:

- For one, it doesn't show that we have the only non-stop flights from New York to Tokyo on our new long-range 747 SP.
- Or that we have the fastest 747 service from New York to Hong Kong. On the SP as far as Tokyo, then a 747 to Hong Kong.
- Or that we have the fastest way to connect to Osaka, Seoul, Okinawa, Taipei, Manila and Singapore via our 747 SP to Tokyo.
- Or that on Sundays, we offer you another way to get to the Orient. Via San Francisco, where, naturally, you can take advantage of a stopover or just continue on.
- Or that on Thursdays, we offer a direct flight to Honolulu. Where you can either stay around for a while and enjoy Hawaii or stay around hardly at all and grab one of our frequent connections to the South Pacific or Australia/New Zealand.

There are also some things the picture of the 747 doesn't tell you:

- That on each of them, you can enjoy a restaurant at a table. You can reserve a seat at one of the tables when you make your flight reservation.)
- It also doesn't show you that in first class we offer a choice from 4 entrees and in economy a choice from 3 entrees. And in both sections, a choice from 2 movies. (A nominal charge of $2.50 per headset in economy; an even more nominal charge of nothing in first class.)

Let's see. Have we left out anything? Uh, only a little nudge: if you like flying 747s (and most people do), you should like flying Pan Am across the Pacific. Because they're the only planes we fly there.

Ford Ahead in Corporate Contributions

dates have only a few months left. After the national nominating conventions this summer, the entire cost of the general election will be paid by Federal subsidy, and no more private contributions will be permitted.

So far this year, according to the candidates' own reports, President Ford has collected $85,900 from such committees, Mr. Carter, $18,700 and Mr. Reagan, $13,600. Mr. Carter has also received $4,800 from political action committees sponsored by organized labor.

Theorists Contradict

The lopsided division of corporate contributions among the two Republican candidates appeared to contradict the widespread theory that the Reagan brand of strong conservatism makes the former California Governor the favorite of business and industry.

However, the figures are complete only through April 30, the day before Mr. Reagan won the Texas primary and then began winning elsewhere. Until that time, many corporate committees may have adopted the functionally conservative policy of not offending the incumbent President.

Mr. Carter got no corporate committee money at all in February, about $5,200 in March but $11,300 in April as his prospects of winning the nomination began to climb. (Most candidates did not begin reporting action committee contributions separately until February.)

Political action committees, both corporate and union, collect voluntary contributions from executives and stockholders on one hand and members on the other and then parcel out the money to candidates favored by management or labor.

The operating costs of these committees are paid out of corporate or union assets. Under the Corrupt Practices Act, such money cannot be donated directly to a candidate, party or political committee.

The corporate committees that have given to both President Ford and Mr. Reagan have all favored the President. The Chevy Chase Committee for Political Participation, an arm of the Standard Oil Company of California, gave $500 to Mr. Ford and $300 to Mr. Reagan. The Olin Executives Voluntary Non-Partisan Political Fund (the Olin Corporation) gave $1,000 to Mr. Ford and $25 to Mr. Reagan.

Some idea of the professional gamblers' view of the Ford-Reagan contest can be measured by contributions made by Harrar's Republican Political Action Committee, sponsored by a Nevada gambling casino. It gave $1,000 to Mr. Ford and $200 to Mr. Reagan.

Three California-based groups were bold enough to make major contributions to Mr. Reagan while giving nothing to the President. They were the Political Awareness Fund (Union Oil Company), $2,500; The Federal Citizenship Responsibility Group (Southern California Edison Company), $1,000; and General Telephone Employees Good Government Club of San Jose, $500.

The Ford campaign received many large contributions from committees that ignored Mr. Reagan. Among these were the Special Political Agricultural Community Education (Dairy Men Inc. of Louisville, Ky.), $5,000; NAACT (Nursing Home Administrators Political Action Committee of Texas), $5,000; Southern Railway Good Government Fund (Southern Railway System), $5,000; Michigan Doctors Political Action Committee (state medical association), $3,000; California Medical Political Action Committee (state medical association), $2,000; Southern Pacific Management Officers Good Government Fund (Southern Pacific Railroad), $2,800; and G-P Employees Fund (Georgia Pacific Corporation), $1,900.

A few of the committees that donated to the President hedged their bets by also giving to Mr. Carter. The Georgia Committee for Political Action, which is financed by the Kentucky milk group called S.P.A.C.E., gave Mr. Ford $5,000 and Mr. Carter $3,000.

The Southern Railway Good Government Fund, which had contributed $5,000 to the President, gave Mr. Carter $950. The Pacific Lighting Political Assistance Committee (Pacific Lighting Service Corporation of Los Angeles) gave Mr. Ford $1,000 and Mr. Carter $200.

Largest Contributor

Mr. Carter's largest corporate contribution from a political action committee came from C-TAPE, the Committee for Thorough Agricultural Political Education, an arm of Associated Milk Producers Inc., which gave him $5,000, the legal maximum from a committee.

In 1974, Associated Milk Producers was fined $35,000 for making illegal corporate campaign contributions in the 1968, 1970 and 1972 elections, and two of the dairy cooperative's former officers were given four-month jail sentences.

Labor contributions to the Carter campaign totaled $3,300 in several installments from the United Automobile Workers, $800 from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and $1,000 from a Frankfort, Ky., group listed as "Labor App Carter."

Like several other contributing committees, the last group had not registered with the Federal Election Commission, and its sponsorship thus could not be readily identified.

Aide Denies Report That Reagan Paid No '70 Income Tax

LOS ANGELES, May 17 (AP) — A spokesman for Ronald Reagan denied today a report indicating that the former California Governor paid no Federal income tax in 1970. But he declined to say how much Mr. Reagan did pay.

The report apparently did not study the matter very closely, Peter Hannaford, a Reagan aide, said of the report, which appeared in yesterday's New York Times. "There's not one of their figures that's correct. Their guesses as to what he paid are simply that and they're not correct."

Mr. Hannaford said that Mr. Reagan did not plan to issue any statement on the article. The article said that Mr. Reagan "almost certainly" paid no Federal income tax in 1970 and that he appeared to have paid much less for 1971 and 1972 than a person in his bracket would have ordinarily paid. It said that Mr. Reagan appeared to have paid about half what a taxpayer in his bracket ordinarily would have paid in 1972 and 1974.

The Times article said that it had based its conclusions on an analysis of information about Mr. Reagan's income and taxes for 1970 through 1975 that Mr. Reagan had made public.

[For 1970, The Times said, Mr. Reagan has announced that he paid a total of $12,536 in Federal, state and local taxes combined. The Times said that records available for public inspection in California showed that of this total, $12,201 represented property taxes, leaving only $335 for all other taxes. The Times article said it was assumed the $335 represented state and city sales taxes.]

MARYLAND VOTING IN PRIMARY TODAY

Brown-Carter Race Viewed as Close—Unruh Backs Ex-Governor of Georgia

By R. W. APPLE JR. Special to The New York Times ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 17—They all gathered this morning at the Hilton Hotel in Baltimore, the wheelhorses of the Democratic machine, to get their marching orders from Gov. Marvin Mandel for tomorrow's Maryland Presidential primary.

This state's politics, like those of Missouri and Texas and a few other states, has achieved a certain renown for producing both colorful characters and corruption, and the cast at breakfast today lived up to at least part of that reputation. There was Mr. Mandel, who faces trial in June for racketeering and mail fraud; Dominic (Mim) DiPietro, a malapropos city councilman from East Baltimore, who was acquitted a few years ago of charges that he had bribed a pool hall owner, Jack Pollock, the legendary crafty former boss of Baltimore, now in his 70's, and State Senator Harry J. Softshoes McGuirk, so called, according to a friend, "because he kind of oozes up to you, and his arm around your shoulder and starts to whisper."

The Governor's choice, as everyone there already knew, was a man celebrated for his virility to Plato rather than to real captains — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California. But that did not bother Mr. DiPietro. In his eyes, he afterward, "Brown is beautiful."

At about the same time, Mr. Brown was campaigning in the Maryland suburbs of Washington, D.C., telling his audiences that he had "the freshest face" in the campaign; that he was always "straight with people," and that a Brown Administration would be "unencumbered by the baggage of the last 20 years."

Asked at an interview in Rockville how he squared his lockings from the old ward of Maryland politics with his own zeal for reform, the governor replied: "I can accept support of all elements of the party, just like John F. Kennedy, without anyone owing me."

In his California campaign, he said, he had the backing of highway contractors, but it cut away construction. Unruh Backs Carter Back up the road in Baltimore, Mr. Brown's chief rival, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, who has been blasting Mr. Brown for his machine support, was winning the endorsement of Jesse M. Unruh, a former Speaker of the California Assembly — a man once considered that state's back-on-virtuosos.

Carter's Adept Use of TV Encounters Competition From Brown in Maryland

By JOSEPH LELYVELD Special to The New York Times BALTIMORE, May 16—In the middle of one of the television commercials shown here for Jimmy Carter in the final week of the Maryland primary campaign, the cover of last week's Time magazine fills the screen with a portrait of the candidate.

A hand enters the screen at the lower left hand corner and flicks the magazine open so that a camera can focus on a poll that shows Mr. Carter defeating President Ford by 10 percentage points. An announcer says that the former Georgia Governor "has proven that he is the only Democrat who can be elected President in 1976."

Mr. Carter is not only the front-runner for his party's nomination, but also the front-runner, by an even more commanding margin, in the race that the Democratic candidates are waging for coverage in the national press and on network television. But in the primary states in which he is running, Mr. Carter still has to scramble and compete with his rivals for "exposure" in local newspapers and newscasts.

Competition Is Rough Here in Maryland, that competition has been especially rough, for Mr. Carter is up against California's telegenic young Governor, Edmund G. Brown Jr., who has enjoyed a great deal of news coverage himself.

Another short Carter television advertisement shows, however, that Mr. Carter's advisers know that primaries are not won on the covers of Time and Newsweek. Prepared just for Maryland, the Carter commercial represents the first time the Georgian has used television commercials to attack an opponent directly — a measure of his concern over the threat posed by Governor Brown.

Mr. Brown has proved to be adept at on-the-run television interviews. Asked the other day by a local reporter about a statement Mr. Carter had made on Jews in the Soviet Union, Mr. Brown said he was glad to see that his rival was going along, because a lot of people were wondering where he stands on Israel.

Referring not at all to Jews in the Soviet Union, he then noted that he had supported Israel "from the beginning."

The Governor showed to his best advantage on television in a half-hour program Friday night that his campaign purchased here for $3,000. Taking questions from viewers who phoned in, he replied in a relaxed style, without the argumentative, slightly abrasive edge that his responses often assume when he is faced with an interviewer or with sharp questions at public rallies.

bowling program. That may explain why most of the callers were men, a development that pleased the candidate's campaign aides, because a Baltimore poll had shown him to be drawing significantly more support from women.

The casual viewer could have decided that Mr. Carter was making a much bigger push for black votes than was Mr. Brown. It remained to be seen whether this might affect former supporters of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama who had seemed to be leaning to Mr. Carter.

The Brown campaign, on its part, took out a big two-page advertisement in The Baltimore Afro-American, a local black paper. "Brown and black are beautiful," the ad proclaimed.

His half-hour program, which was expected to "penetrate" at least 10 percent of the 735,000 television households in the Baltimore area, followed a Major Edward Hanna of Utica and Abe Hirschfeld, a wealthy businessman. Mr. O'Dwyer got the endorsement yesterday of Borough President Percy E. Sutton of Manhattan. "We cannot win with a candidate like Patrick Moynihan, who is Senator Buckley's mirror image," Mr. Sutton wrote in a letter to Mr. O'Dwyer.

Democrats Put Moynihan on Platform Subcommittee

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, May 17—Despite protests from some liberals and blacks, Daniel P. Moynihan was elected today to the drafting subcommittee of the Democratic Platform Committee.

Mr. Moynihan, Ambassador to India under President Nixon and representative to the United Nations under President Ford, is the only person on the 15-member subcommittee with special expertise in foreign policy.

Party officials said that Mr. Moynihan was placed on the slate of candidates for the subcommittee as a concession to Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington. Mr. Moynihan endorsed Mr. Jackson's Presidential candidacy and campaigned for him in Massachusetts and New York.

An effort to remove Mr. Moynihan's name from the official slate was rejected in the full committee by a margin of nearly 3 to 1.

The subcommittee's function is to prepare a draft platform for presentation to the full platform committee next month. The platform adopted by the full committee will be presented to the Democratic National Convention at Madison Square Garden in July.

Mr. Moynihan's election came as the platform committee opened four days of hearings at the Hyatt Regency Hotel here. It is the last set of hearings before the platform drafting procedure begins.

New York politicians said that Mr. Moynihan's position on the subcommittee would help him, as has been speculated, he decides to run for the Democratic nomination for the Senate from New York. The politicians said that a role at the Democratic National Convention would help re-establish Mr. Moynihan's credentials as a Democrat.

Although he served in both the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations, Mr. Moynihan, a professor at Harvard, was closely identified with the foreign and domestic policies of Presidents Nixon and Ford.

Action Last Friday Mr. Moynihan was not a member of the platform committee until last Friday. Then, at the behest of Senator Jackson, the leaders of the New York delegation to the national convention removed Chester Straub, a former state senator, from his seat on the platform committee and replaced him with Mr. Moynihan.

Of the 274 convention delegates elected in the New York primary last month, 103 are pledged to Mr. Jackson. And Mr. Moynihan's possible Senate candidacy is said to be viewed favorably by party regulars. Over the weeks, representatives of Mr. Jackson said that their principal request to the platform committee was that Mr. Moynihan be given a spot on the drafting subcommittee. "I know Jackson wanted him, and we were trying to accommodate everyone as much as possible," Robert S. Strauss, the party chairman, said after Mr. Moynihan's election. Mr. Moynihan is the only New Yorker on the subcommittee. Perry Sutton, the Manhattan Borough President, who is also a member of the platform committee, said that he did not believe Mr. Moynihan would "represent my interests or the interests of black people generally in the area of foreign policy." Mr. Sutton voted for Mr. Moynihan nonetheless, because he said, he thought it was important that the state be represented on the subcommittee. Also opposing Mr. Moynihan was Sam W. Brown Jr., state treasurer of Colorado and a one-time leader of the antiwar movement. Mr. Brown argued that Mr. Moynihan did not represent the consensus foreign policy views of the Democratic Party. The official slate, however, had been cleared in advance with all the Presidential candidates. Stuart Eizenstat, a member of Jimmy Carter's campaign staff and a platform committee member, voted for Mr. Moynihan, as did supporters of other Presidential candidates. Nearly 100 persons scheduled to testify before the hearings end Thursday. AS expected, the platform committee elected Carl Dell R. Anderson of Minnesota as permanent chairman. Mr. Anderson did not represent Massachusetts and was chairman of the drafting committee.

Mr. Moynihan's election came as the platform committee opened four days of hearings at the Hyatt Regency Hotel here. It is the last set of hearings before the platform drafting procedure begins.

Mrs. Abzug insisted, in answer to repeated questions that she intended to persist in her Senate campaign. She represents the liberal 20th District, a long, thin sliver along the western edge of Manhattan and the Bronx, and there has been considerable speculation among politicians that she would not leave the safety of that for the uncertainty of a candidate — crowded Democratic primary — five hopefuls have declared already and a couple of others might—and, if she survives, a November election against Mr. Buckley.

Her campaign manager, Douglas Ireland, once a mountaintop plump man, but now slimmed down to 213 pounds, greeted news conference guests by grinning as he discounted reports that his candidate was not really serious: "Would I lose all this weight for nothing?" Mrs. Abzug declined to say who might be the most formidable among her Democratic opponents. Was she afraid, someone asked, of Daniel Patrick Moynihan, former United States Representative at the United Nations, whose potential candidacy is looked upon kindly by some organization leaders. "I'm not afraid of Mr. Moynihan," Mrs. Abzug said. "I'm afraid of no one."

Control Board Businessmen Press For a Strong Policy on Wage Freeze

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

The three business-executive members of the state's Emergency Financial Control Board reacted to Federal criticism of the city's austerity plan yesterday by pressing for a general policy on labor contracts.

In three separate private meetings, attended also by Stephen Berger, the executive director of the Control Board, and Felix G. Rohatyn, the chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, the three businessmen reportedly were concerned that a lack of a well-defined policy on wages and fringe benefits would seriously threaten the austerity plan in the round of negotiations next month on labor contracts with most city workers.

Mr. Berger would not discuss the meetings. Another state source said that the demand from the Senate Banking Committee that the city maintain a strong wage-freeze policy seemed to have stirred considerable concern and pressure among the business executives of the Control Board.

The three are William M. Ellinghaus of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, David L. Margolis of Colt Industries, and Albert V. Casey of American Airlines. The other members of the Control Board are Governor Carey, Mayor Beame, State Comptroller Arthur Levitt and City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin.

The Control Board, which was created to supervise the city's fiscal reform, meets this morning at the Governor's office, and the subject of labor policy is expected to come up, along with such other troublesome topics as the city University austerity issue and Mayor Beame's revised budget-cutting plans.

One city official familiar with the concern stirred by the Senate Banking Committee's report commented privately, "Well, it's one thing to talk tough in private, but it's another thing for the Control Board to be willing to take the heat of publicly dictating labor terms."

The Senate committee recommended that the Federal Government seriously consider ending its seasonal emergency loans to the city of $2.3 billion annually if the city showed signs of easing the wage freeze. The warning came amid the current attempt to renegotiate a transit-workers contract that would be acceptable to the Control Board.

Mr. Berger, speaking cautiously, said that the Senate committee's report had been welcomed but that it had seemed "bifurcated," because it was issuing warnings even as it granted that the city had been making some progress toward reform. He said he would like to see detailed recommendations rather than general criticism.

Privately, one city official contended that the report basically had been designed to show a "tough posture" toward the city. This is to be expected and is even beneficial, this official asserted, but the city should guard against "over-reaction."

His implication was that if politicians members of the board might be in a better position than the businessmen to understand the need for providing negotiating room for the unions, even if it is marginal, because of austerity pressures.

Victor Gotbaum, executive director of District Council 37 of the State, County and Municipal Employees Union, the largest of the municipal unions, responded to the report by issuing an invitation to Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin and the committee chairman, to visit New York and see the extent of the cutbacks of city employees made here.

"Senator Proxmire seems to have a total lack of perception of the cutbacks the people and employees of this city have undergone," Mr. Gotbaum said. "I'd invite him to the homes of some 85,000 members who work for New York City and earn less than the U.S. Government minimum-budget-family standards."

In other fiscal matters, both city and state officials said that they had no progress to report in the attempt to prod a new budget-cutting plan from the City University. Accordingly, they said the city's monthly subsidizing of the university would fall short of the university's May 30 payroll, and the Control Board was not likely to approve an advance of June funds.

At City Hall, Councilman Matthew J. Troy, chairman of the Finance Committee, said he would erase up to 800 city cars from the proposed new budget along with 100 drivers. After another day of committee hearings on the $12.5 billion budget, Mr. Troy said that the cars were not needed and that their elimination would save up to $2.3 million.

Whether Mr. Troy could succeed in such a move is in doubt, since the Mayor has veto power over the Council's budget actions.

Comptroller Goldin, meanwhile, announced that the city would make its second repayment today under the emergency Federal loan program. The repayment, totaling $240 million borrowed Dec. 31, would be two days early, he said. The remaining payments this fiscal year are $250 million, due June 20 and $500 million, June 30, payments that the Mayor's office said would be met on time.

8 Unions Plan to Respect Any Guild Action at Post

Officers of eight newspaper unions met with leaders of the Newspaper Guild yesterday and promised to respect picket lines of the guild if it carried through its threat to strike The New York Post at 5 P.M. Thursday.

The guild, which represents news, business and clerical employees at the newspaper has been working at The Post without a contract since March 3, 1975. Contracts reached by the guild with The New York Times and The Daily News last year called for a $25-a-week raise the first year, $20 the second and $20 the third.

Theodore W. Kheel, mediator in the dispute, said a negotiation session between the guild and The Post would be held starting at 4 P.M. tomorrow at Automation House, 49 East 68th Street.

Yale Awards 2,876 Degrees, a Record

By MICHAEL KNIGHT

Special to The New York Times NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 17—Yale University awarded a record 2,876 graduate and undergraduate degrees this morning at commencement exercises that marked a thaw in the often icy town-gown relationship here.

Mayor Frank F. Logue, who was elected last fall with heavy support from the Yale wards, took his place without fanfare this morning in the university's traditional black-robed academic procession as it wound through the campus and around the downtown New Haven Green.

The procession, which is meant to symbolize the university's connection with and dependence on New Haven, had been boycotted for six years by former Mayor Bartholomew F. Guida and officials of his administration as an expression of their displeasure with the university.

Student Activism Relations between the city and the university, which dominates New Haven's economic and cultural life, worsened dramatically during the period of student activism in the late 1960's and early 1970's and then became embroiled in a series of financial, tax and real estate controversies, all played against a long-standing backdrop of class and ethnic antagonisms.

Mr. Logue's quiet appearance today, which went without official notice, marked the waning of those controversies and left the spotlight today on the recipients of degrees and their parents, relatives and friends, many of whom took photographs and waved as the procession entered the university's Old Campus for the formal degree-granting.

The bachelors' degrees awarded today represented in many cases an investment in tuition and other expenses of more than $20,000, a figure that is expected to climb to $24,000 soon.

Shriver and Buckley Among the parents present were Sargent Shriver, the 1972 Democratic Vice Presidential candidate, whose son, Robert, received an undergraduate degree, and William F. Buckley Jr., the columnist, whose son, Christopher, also received a degree.

Last night's heavy rains and the continuing inclement weather early this morning had threatened to force the ceremonies indoors, in which case all but a thousand of the spectators would have had to watch the graduation by closed-circuit television because of a lack of seating capacity at any one university hall. The rains ended early, however, and the ceremonies took place under misty, chilly skies that, nonetheless, maintained a Yale tradition of rainless graduations begun after World War II.

Honorary degrees were awarded to the following: William T. Coleman Jr., Secretary of the United States Department of Transportation; William G. Milliken, Governor of Michigan;

William R. Hewlett, president of the Hewlett-Packard Corporation; Masliah Kosztopovich, cellist, conductor and pianist; Garry Trudeau, syndicated cartoonist; Bernard Bailyn, professor of history at Harvard;

Elizabeth Drew, journalist and political commentator; Herbert S. Bailey Jr., director of the Princeton University Press; Mary D. Leakey, archeologist; Jesse W. Beame, professor of physics at the University of Virginia; Franklin S. Cooper, associate director of research for the Haskins Laboratories of New Haven; Mr. Trudeau, who began his "Doonesbury" comic strip while an undergraduate at Yale, became at 27 years of age the youngest person to receive an honorary degree from the university. He was given a prolonged standing ovation from the students that was joined by Kingman Brewster Jr., president of Yale, who has often been caricatured in Mr. Trudeau's drawings.

Higher-Rent Apartments Sought at the St. George

By CHARLES KAISER

An $11 million renovation is planned for the St. George Hotel in Brooklyn Heights to transform the deteriorating structure into an upper-middle-income apartment house.

What was once regarded as one of the city's better hotels has become an eyesore in recent years, and the plan disclosed yesterday by Herbert Handman is the latest in a series of proposals put forth in the last few years to rejuvenate the building.

Mr. Handman's plan to transform the hotel's 31-story tower building into a 392-unit apartment house hinges on his obtaining a commitment for $3.46 million in long-term financing for the project. Mr. Handman's mortgage brokers, Ackman Brothers, said yesterday they had obtained a commitment of $2.8 million for the project from the Lincoln Savings Bank.

Mr. Handman said that the rest of the financing should be in place within three weeks.

8 Buildings Involved The tower is one of the hotel's eight buildings, which together occupy the entire square block bounded by Clark, Hicks, Pineapple, and Henry Streets. It is also the site of the Clark Street subway stop, one stop on the IRT from Wall Street in Manhattan.

Mr. Handman said he hoped that he would eventually be able to renovate all the buildings.

Ruth Jacobson, the hotel's general manager, said yesterday that 550 people were still living in the hotel, paying rents ranging from $162 to $180 a month, but the tower building, since January 1975, has been empty.

Mr. Handman is a former Manhattan criminal lawyer turned real estate developer whose only previous experience in the field involved arranging for the renovation of the Greenwich Hotel, at 160 Bleecker Street. It reopened this spring as The Atrium, and like the St. George proposal, it was also financed by the Lincoln Savings Bank.

Health Club Suggested The new St. George would include efficiency, one and two-bedroom apartments and a health club built around the hotel's famous swimming pool.

Mr. Handman said a one-bedroom apartment would rent for $350 to $400 a month, and if everything goes according to schedule, the renovation of the tower would be completed by the spring of 1978.

Andrew J. Singer, a vice president of Ackman Brothers, cited the apartments' superb views of the Manhattan skyline, "affordable rents," and the proposed health club as the building's major "selling points."

Another possible key to the project's viability is the city's J-51 tax-abatement program, which provides substantial tax benefits for conversion of hotels into apartment buildings.

Title to the St. George is held by the Fairmoot Place Syndicate, in which Edmund Margulies is a principal. Mr. Margulies said yesterday that a mortgage on the property had been foreclosed but that he believed the Fairmoot syndicate retained the right to sell the hotel to Mr. Handman until a foreclosure auction was held.

The St. George's first building was completed in 1895, but the tower was finished in 1929. The hotel made headlines in 1933 when Franklin D. Roosevelt invited Eli Danzig, the hotel's band leader, to perform at his inaugural ball.

COMMODORE HELPS SWITCH DELEGATES The 500 delegates and their families, from five states who drew the Commodore Hotel for their stay during the Democratic National Convention at Madison Square Garden will be accommodated in four other hotels, Deputy Mayor Stanley M. Friedman said yesterday.

With the 57-year-old Commodore scheduled to close today, Mr. Friedman met yesterday at City Hall with representatives of the hotel and the Penn Central railroad, which owns the hotel at Lexington Avenue and 42d Street.

Mr. Friedman said the representatives had agreed to accommodate the group in four of their other hotels, the Roosevelt, Biltmore, Barclay and Berkshire, at the same rates that the Commodore would have charged. He estimated that this would cost Penn Central $35,000 in rate differentials.

The state delegations drew lots to see what hotels would accommodate them. Delegates from New Hampshire, Minnesota, Colorado, Idaho and Montana were assigned to the Commodore. The Commodore was also chosen by Senator Frank Church of Idaho, a Presidential candidate.

Mrs. King Is Back on Cup Team

Billie Jean King, Chris Evert and Rosemary Casals were named yesterday by the Federation Cup team by the United States Tennis Association.

Women's teams from 32 countries will compete for $130,000 in prize money in the elimination tournament, which is similar to the men's Davis Cup, in Philadelphia Aug. 22 to 29.

Miss Evert, the top-ranked American, will make her Federation Cup debut, but Mrs. King and Miss Casals are veterans in the international event, which began in 1963 and is being played in the United States for only the second time.

Mrs. King, the playing captain, has a cup record of 31 victories and four losses in singles and doubles. Miss Casals is 7-0 in singles and doubles.

The competition format calls for two singles matches and one doubles. Mrs. King and Miss Evert are expected to play singles, with Miss Casals joining Mrs. King—they are America's top-ranked team—in the doubles.

The United States has won the cup four times, the last time in 1969. Last year's winning nation was Czechoslovakia, led by Martina Navratilova, who has since defaulted to the United States and is ineligible for the 1976 competition.

Kodes Is Upset

HAMBURG, West Germany May 17 (UPI)—Jan Kodes was upset by Kim Warwick, 6-4, 6-2, today in the opening round of the $100,000 West German tennis championships, a Grand Prix event. The 24-year-old Aussie scored with a booming serve in topping the former Wimbledon champion.

Kjell Johansson of Sweden advanced with a 6-2, 1-6, 10-8 triumph over Harald Eischenbroich of West Germany. Other winners were Colin Dibley of Australia, Jaime Fillol of Chile, Victor Pecci of Paraguay and Ivan Molina of Colombia.

Three American women lost. Marianna Simionescu of Romania beat Beth Norton, 7-5, 4-6, 6-4. Ina Riedel of West Germany downed Betsy Nagelsen, 6-3, 6-2, and Brigitte Cupers of South Africa defeated Kathy May, 6-0, 6-2.

Commercial shad fisherman towing a skiff along Delaware River in Lambertville, N.J.

Wood, Field and Stream: Shad Fishing

By NELSON BRYANT
Special to The New York Times

LAMBERTVILLE, N.J.— Lunging upstream on a heavily worn footpath along the east bank of the Delaware River, several commercial shad fishermen towed a net-laden skiff behind them.

Unseen under the hard-packed earth beneath their feet were flat stones placed there nearly a century before when the Lewis family of Lambertville first began to fish commercially for shad on the river.

Today the operation is run by Fred Lewis, a soft-spoken man who will tell you with obvious pride that his endeavor is the oldest continuously operated shad fishery on the Delaware.

Every year when dogwood sends out its layers of white blossoms and trailing arbutus sweetens sunny, sheltered spots in the deep woods, Lewis and his men go forth for the Alosa sapidissima, or American shad, an anadromous fish that spawns in rivers and streams of both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

The sun was low over the Pennsylvania hills beyond the opposite shore when the fishermen towed the skiff 600 yards upstream and then rowed out into the river, leaving out 150 yards of three-inch mesh net that was eight-feet deep behind them. Eschewing the use of an outboard motor, two men rode the skiff, while Lewis standing in the stern, assisted with a pole. Back on shore with the other end of the net, one man began to move down the path.

At the end of the narrow island from which the netting operation is conducted, Lewis and his partners brought their end of the net to shore. The island is connected to the Jersey Shore by a narrow footbridge.

Near the close of the maneuver, when only a few yards of net was in the water, onlookers, including many townspeople, could see the splashing and surging of captured fish.

Perhaps 200 blueback herring came tumbling out on shore, but there were only two shad, both females laden with roe.

One of the shad was tagged and released by fisheries technicians of the Delaware River Basin Anadromous Fish Project, the other went to the fishermen. Some of the herring were taken by one of the onlookers, the others went back to the river.

Before dark, another haul was made, and again there were only two shad in the net and one of them was the fish previously tagged.

Lewis and his men, who work on shad in the net, are perturbed by the scanty catch. They had taken quite a few fish earlier in the season when the unseasonably warm weather triggered the upstream migration of the shad ahead of time, and they expected to do well again when the effects of the early May cold spell had ended.

Lewis is, moreover, quite used to limited catches. "There were two years in the 1950's when we took no shad at all," he said.

Tradition and something more is the key to Lewis's motivation. He loves the river as a seacoast dweller loves the sea and the shad are a symbol of the Delaware's threatened but continuing vitality.

Holding a just-caught roe shad, Lewis examined her carefully, turning her in his hands so the last light of the dying sun gleamed on her silvery flanks. "A fine fish," he said, "in excellent condition. Isn't she lovely?"

A short while later, a woman from the town bought the shad and its roe and marched happily over the bridge back into town with her prize carefully wrapped in brown paper.

Knowing the Rules Can Help in Go

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Dr. Richard S. Silver is a Park Avenue dentist and an expert on the rules of golf in the United States. He almost makes it painless when he explains what a golfer may do with his ball after it has landed in a strange place.

News of Golf

Touring a course with Silver during a tournament is worth while to anyone who wants to learn the way golf should be played. Not enough persons take time learning the rules.

While officiating at the Metropolitan Golf Association's intercollegiate championship tournament at Woodcrest in Syosset, L.I., last week, Silver watched as one player drove three straight balls off a tee into a water hole about 180 yards away. The player was dismayed he would get over that hazard and was ready to tee up again.

Silver approached him and said: "Do you know you can drop the ball just behind that water hazard and hit from there? You don't have to keep hitting off way back at the tee."

The player did not know that rule (332). He walked up to do as Silver had suggested.

Later Silver saw one tournament leader hit into a lateral water hazard. The player was going to walk far back and drop the ball behind the hazard's edge farthest from the green, even though his ball had fallen midway in the little pond.

Silver explained that rule 333 permitted the golfer to drop his ball "within two club-lengths of the point where the ball last crossed the margin of the hazard." The golfer was thus much closer to the green and got his par, despite the stroke penalty.

Some college coaches admitted they might be failing their players in not explaining the rules properly.

A recent forest fire that swept through 35,000 acres of pine just west of Myrtle Beach, S.C., skirted two of the two dozen courses in the area. Most seriously threatened was the Myrtle Beach National. The fire, which started adjacent to the National, was reported first by Ed Bullock, the pro there. It then moved north. Two days later, out of control, it came back toward the National on a strong wind.

Bullock had to clear his courses of golfers one afternoon, and shut one for a loss of about $20,000 a day. But fortunately there was no damage to the courses.

It was business as usual at all Myrtle Beach courses that second week in April, although once in a while golfers hit through smoke or tracked lightly in the rough. There were some hot spots remained. A couple of hackers got through highway police lines now and then to make their date at a course, even though roads were occasionally closed to move fire equipment around. The fire was the largest in South Carolina history, but the turnout of golfers continued to record numbers.

Chinaglia, Pele Star as Cosmos Win

when Pelé and Tony Field combined to set Chinaglia free. The broad-shouldered Italian put his shot into the upper right corner.

Seconds before his second goal, Chinaglia had a scissors kick sail over the top of the net. His reward was a standing ovation, because it was the kind of play North American Soccer League fans don't often enjoy.

With nine minutes left, it was Pelé's turn to get the crowd to its feet. The Brazilian combined with Field and Brian Tunison to score his 1,244th career goal with a shot from 12 yards out.

Then with 17 seconds left, the crowd was on its feet again as Chinaglia exchanged two passes with Pelé. Chinaglia's second pass was the kind no other player on the Cosmos had been giving Pelé. It was a thing of beauty and Pelé made good use of it by blasting the ball in the net.

"Chinaglia is so good, he makes Pelé look good, too," said John Rennie, the soccer coach at Columbia University. "This was the best game I have seen the Cosmos play."

Fall Collections Chase the Gloom Away

By BERNADINE MORRIS
After six lean years, Seventh Avenue is undergoing a renaissance. The elaborate productions at theaters and hotels that marked the introduction of fall collections were symptomatic of the flowering of confidence on the part of designers. Happily, their enthusiasm was not misplaced.

Without resorting to the obvious gimmickry that marked clothes during the hippie era—and led to the widespread turn-off on fashion as the midi rose and fell in 1970—designers have turned out clothes that are adventurous and relaxed. They have brought together themes that have been toyed with by one or another of them through most of the 1970's and achieved that most-desired accomplishment, evolution rather than revolution.

That means no throwing out of old clothes by women who have kept reasonably in touch, no necessity for a choice between pants and skirts, no needless pondering over the precise point where hemlines should stop.

Neither is there any insistence on slim shapes over full ones. There isn't any visible distortion of the figure, through making a waistline preternaturally high or unusually low, which inevitably results in heartfelt cries from women who mourn, "I can't wear that—I'm too short." Or too tall, or too full-bodied or too flat.

For the key to the new collections for fall, 1976, is the natural body, draped naturally in fabric. What does look old-fashioned or passé is anything that clutches the body too tightly, that inhibits easy movement, that makes a woman look as if she were sitting for her portrait instead of going about her daily business.

This is as true of evening clothes, which provide for fantasy as well as glamour, as it is for daytime clothes, which tend to be rugged, simple and informal. Of course, there are hazards. The woman who worried a few years back about how to tie a scarf will have bigger problems. The scarves have increased to blanket size. Ponchos and capes are prevalent. Winding oneself into them, day or night, takes a bit of practice. Probably, some people are born with the skill, but like the salsa or the bustle, it can be acquired.

It's necessary, because the giant poncho or blanket is a component of the easy, unstructured look. Like no other part, it achieves its individuality by the way it is handled by each wearer. At any rate, it appears in everything from poplin for the rain to cashmere for luxurious evenings; it's worth a bit of practice before a bedroom mirror to avoid strangulation.

Layer on Layer

What the majority of clothes are based on for the new season is the American-born sportswear concept of separates dressing. This has been developed in formal as well as informal clothes and has a lot going for it.

It can involve layering, but it doesn't have to. Those big scarves, for example, can wrap up coats, which in turn cover jackets, which can be worn over sweaters, vests or shirts. It is not, of course, obligatory to wear all the parts together, or even to buy them.

One picks the parts that appeal—that's where the choice of pants versus skirt comes in. One alternates the pieces one wears, depending on weather, time of year, occupation. One even—and here's the economy angle—alternates new clothes with old, loved ones.

That's important, the economy angle. Because the price of clothes, like groceries and rent, is by no means static. The silk shirt that is the first layer—or maybe the second, after the sweater—of much fall ensembling can easily run into a three-figure price tag. Anyone with a supply of nice classic silk shirts in her closet is ahead of the game.

And for those who feel the price of a silk shirt is as outlandish as that of a porterhouse steak, there are plenty of synthetic substitutes, some of which almost feel like silk. More than most seasons, the difference between expensive clothes and less expensive ones is in the authenticity or luxury of the fabric.

New Blood

What has contributed most to the splendor of the fashion season is the proliferation of new houses. This counteracts the tendency during the last six years of old, established concerns folding their tents and fading away.

Jacques Tiffau is back in business, now working at Originala. Both his own company and Originala had closed their doors for a time during the troubles of the 70's. Hazel Haire and Jerry Feder, both of whom once worked for Anne Klein, have introduced good separates collections. Mrs. Haire under her own name and Mr. Feder under that of Betty Hansoo, another Klein colleague.

Patti Cappalli's collection for Jerry Silverman Sports is also commendable, and Gloria Vanderbilt, with the assistance of Jesper Nyboe, who used to turn his needle at Geoffrey Beene's, promises to be another Diane Von Furstenberg.

Richard Assatly's collection for Gino-Snow had such good advice as to be turned away from his showing and those who made it inside were not disappointed. Gil Alimbez, who has worked for Genre for a few seasons, is emerging as a major talent, and Bill Haire, the husband of Hazel, was commended for his work for Friedrichs.

These are just a few of the new names who are part of the fashion renaissance. While that is encouraging enough, what really turns it into a major event are the exceptionally good clothes by such established designers as Bill Blass, Kasper, Beene and Halston. That's what really gives the fashion situation solidity.

What gives everybody a lift is the fact that the collections are considered better than the ones shown last month in Paris. That's enough to make everybody smile, especially in the Bicentennial year.

Didn't Anyone Tell the Tulips That It's a Bicentennial Year?

By BETSY WADE

It's the latest cry, my throat constricts. I have not been able to master, in turn, crossword puzzles, ceramics, chess, the recycling of wine bottles into tumblers, crewel-work, karate, macramé, backgammon or Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman. I even missed out on the Year of the Woman because 1976 was the year I was being put down as a radical feminist.

And now this. Someone had evidently left some bulbs in the lawn. In warm weather one year, they put forth yellowish flowers and, despite a medical history of dozens of dead snake plants and roses that took nearly a generation to bloom, was touched by the bulb's trusting gesture. Since they didn't wither at my glance, I figured maybe bulb gardening would be my métier.

I read some literature and last fall I bought little bags of home meal that cost as much as if they had been tea bags. I tossed about great cubes of pest moss, I drowled in the broken glass and clotted scot, struggling for what the authorities said would be that moment when the soil would feel "good to handle."

Then I blazed with inspiration. I mailed an irresistible Bicentennial offering:

- 10 Blue Admiral Darwin Tulip, Blue Blue
- 10 Duke of Wellington Darwin Tulip, pure white
- 10 Scarlet Leader Darwin Tulip, Brilliant red

Now, by heaven, the streets would be jammed with tourists pouring through to admire the show.

I planted them in neat rows under the rosebush that never bloomed anyway. Unlike the time when the labels soaked off the cans and I couldn't remember what was what, I planted these in perfect order: Red there, white in the center and blue at the end. Two rows, five of each color to a row. I broadcast certain secret nourishments over the soil, which still didn't feel too wonderful to handle, and waited for May, the promised date of delivery.

The white tulips came up, sure enough, all 10 in Prussian rows. And in a day they lay their pretty heads down on the curb and expired. The reds were next, scarlet and splendid, but the strain of arising was too great for them and they, too, collapsed with fatigue. I couldn't seem to get more sun on them, so I gave up hope. After the first two batches had succumbed, the blues stubbornly came up the other day, and they're fine except they're lavender. My Bicentennial display is rather a bust, and I am eager to get on with some other year.

However, now someone has given me an ad for a "living American flag, science's most spectacular achievement," a pre-seeded matting that produces—or is supposed to produce—a 25-star flag in what looks like a cross between dyed carnations and Buddy poppies. I figure this would be a real traffic-stopper, especially since with my luck, it would probably come up a Union Jack.

The New York Times/Miron Co.

My way of making occasions memorable. The simplest slip of matte jersey under a satin-striped silk jacket that's beautifully back-baring. The kind of dressing that puts me in the mood to celebrate. Solid rayon matte jersey dress and printed silk jacket with scarf. In pale greens, coral or pink for 6 to 14 sizes, $360. Evening Collections, Fifth Floor. Sorry, no mail or phone orders.

Narcissistic T-Shirt Wearers, the Ultimate Ego Trip

G. KENNEDY
If you thought you could be done better (they've been in rhinestones, delicate lace, apertured, painted and with everything in statements to slogans) along a wrinkle for the has come a long time these days as the shirt.

Franklin Simon yesterday to try on her "portrait." She decided to wear it out of the store. Wedco Business Systems Inc., the New York firm that came up with the idea and then developed the process, set up shop on the first floor of Franklin Simon with the camera, computer and hot press transfer equipment—everything necessary to complete the 60-second process. Beverly Barsky, who had spent the morning in a doctor's office, decided she deserved a treat and picked out a yellow shirt for her portrait. She took off her coat, fussed with her hair and asked, "How does this work?" The camera scans the face as a special computer ribbon reports the image of the computer for a printout, which is made up of 16 symbols of various intensities. The computer printout is then ironed onto the T-shirt. The process can be done with a snapshot, Virginia Donovan, who works in the jewelry department of the store, was intrigued to learn. But her dog, Charlie, she was told, would not be a suitable model because there is not enough color variation in his face for the printout to show up. "That's too bad," she said in a disappointed tone. "I have a snapshot of him with me now." The portrait T-shirts are $12 each and will be available on Franklin Simon's first floor (the main store at 33 West 34th Street) until Saturday. After that they will be available through mail order. Takashi Wada, dividing his time between his native Japan and the United States, has developed a following in both countries for his gold and sterling silver jewelry with its clean sculptural lines and highly polished finish. An exhibition and sale of 80 examples of the designer's work at the Aaron Faber Gallery, 578 Fifth Avenue at 47th Street, through Saturday, is representative of his style, illustrating as it does the adaptation of ancient Japanese techniques to contemporary forms and a growing interest in different shades of gold. Combinations of green gold, yellow gold, red gold and white gold give a multicolor effect very much to Mr. Wada's taste. He introduces color also with helmo, fine silk cord from Japan braided by hand in three or four colors, which very often sets off a pendant better than does a metal chain. Shakudo, a metal inlay technique used on samurai swords, adds yet another dimension to some of the jewelry, a touch of brownish hue to a yellow gold ring of geometric design. A series of variations on the egg shape are among the designer's favorites. These tactile pieces have gone over well here and in Tokyo. Two eggs joined together form a pendant, while single eggs can be cut open and set with stones such as tourmalines, to form dressy rings. Some of the items are definitely feminine, others designed specifically for men, but either sex would enjoy a pendant consisting of silver rectangle and brass disk with fish etched on one side, a hexagon on the other. This can be spun around to pick up both images simultaneously. Prices in the show go from $70 for simple silver rings and cuff links to $1,800 for an elaborate sterling and shakudo necklace, but the majority of pieces are in the $200-to-$400 range.

What it means to be a professional athlete in America...

...by an insider who really knows!

Bill Bradley, Princeton graduate, All-American, Rhodes Scholar and New York Knick. Now this multi-talented athlete celebrates a life in sports, in his own words, displaying all the humor, pressure, rewards, emotional highs and lows that mark the career of a professional in American sports.

"... a remarkably searching, smart book that will be irresistible not just to those close to professional basketball but to anyone interested in the experience of the professional athlete." —Newsweek

"I found Life On The Run fascinating, insightful, and I could not put it down." —ARTHUR ASHE

"Of the hundreds of sports books that I have read... this is the closest one to a work of art. The insights, the expressions of feelings, the whole flow of words, these are not those of a basketball player who happens to be able to write, but of a literary craftsman who happens to be able to play basketball." —Philadelphia Bulletin

"Certainly one of the best sports books in recent years, this incisive volume appeals to both the heart and mind... It's a book that shouldn't be missed." —Publishers Weekly

"A very personal book, and one which contains some universals for both sport and life which should be applicable to us all." —St. Louis Globe-Democrat

Chess: A Slogger Turns Bright To Capture a Tourney

By ROBERT BYRNE

The international tournament in Beersheba, Israel was won by two Beersheba players, Vladimir Liberzon, a grandmaster, and Yair Kraidman, an international master. Each scored 7½ points in the 11-round tourney. Liberzon going undefeated with four victories and seven draws and Kraidman winning five games, drawing five and losing one (to International Master William Hartston of England).

Tied for third place were Hartston, Drazen Marovic, a Yugoslav grandmaster, International Masters Yaacov Bleiman and Shimon Kagan, both of Israel, and Leon Lederman, an Israeli master. Each tallied 6 points.

Marovic had set the early pace and still held the lead with 5½ points after eight rounds, but successive defeats at the hands of Kagan and Kraidman knocked him out of the running. Meanwhile, Liberzon was steadily amassing points and Kraidman, who had started slow, burst through by winning his last four games.

A Departure From Pattern
The dour and patient Kraidman usually thinks nothing of tenaciously slogging through long adjournment sessions, but he departed from that grim regimen to spring a bright combination that collapsed Lederman in the last round.

The system with 3... P-B3, an invention of Paul Kerck, has enjoyed such a good reputation that most players prefer to avoid it by 3... N-B3 instead of 3... P-B3. It has been taken for granted that the white queen is exposed too early after 4 P-Q4. PzP; 5 QzP.

Perhaps Lederman should have explored the aggressive 9... P-Q5, especially since accepting the gambit with 10 BxN, BxP; 11 BxNch, PzB; 12 OxpCh, P-Q2; 13 Q-K4ch, K-B1 must be too dangerous for White.

On the other hand, his de-

Position after 18-BxPch

... B-K3 might have proven sufficient as long as he avoided the later possibility 13... QzNP; 14 QR-N1, Q-R6; 15 QzQ, BzQ; 16 BzN, PzB; 17 RzNP, with clear positional advantage to White.

Lederman's 13... P-KR3 was a correct defense to the mounting pressure on his isolated QP, but after 14 BxN, BzB; 15 N-B4 he should have played 15... BxN; 16 PzB, N-K2, which balances the weakness of the black QP by the weakness of the white QBP.

Instead, he went for 15... QzNP with the idea of giving his queen for both white rooks, but he didn't catch onto Kraidman's clever tactical shots. After 16 N/3zP, he did not want to play 16... QzR; 17 RzQ, BzR because 18 NxB, PzN; 19 N-B7, QR-B1; 20 NzP leaves Black a pawn down. But there was really nothing there.

Bridge: U.S. Team in the Olympiad Advances One in Standings

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Special to The New York Times
MONTE CARLO, Monaco, May 17—While Britain, Italy and Sweden took turns in the lead, the United States made a modest improvement in its position at the world team Olympiad here today.

The Americans, recovering from last night's match when they were upset, 0 to 20, by South Africa, won 14 to 6 against Hungary and 20 to 0 against Iceland, and scored 12 points for a bye round. They gained one position, at the expense of Germany, but are still more than three matches behind the leaders, exactly as they have been for the last four days.

In tonight's play, the United States beat Indonesia, 16 to 4, while the top-ranked teams struggled. Sweden beat Britain, 16 to 8, Italy could only beat the lowly Bahamas team, 11 to 9, and Poland lost, 6 to 14 to Colombia. The standings after 30 of the 45 rounds were: Italy, 444; Britain, 443; Sweden, 432; Poland, 424; France and Brazil, 413; Switzerland, 397, and United States, 368.

Women's Team (Falters)
In the women's championship, the American chances seem to be dwindling. Today the team scored 20 points, the maximum, against Brazil, but could only win 11 to 9 against an Israeli team that bid several ambitious games and brought them home. Italy still has a big lead, and if the Americans beat the defending champions in play tomorrow night they may give an opening to the British, who have easy matches to come.

The standings are: Italy, 212; Britain, 188; United States, 187; Canada, 186; France, 176, and Denmark, 175.

In play tonight, the American women had a disastrous session, trailing France at the halfway mark by 90 international match points.

Like their male counterparts, the American women players do not seem to be quite as effective in the Olympiad format of short matches as they are in long head-to-head contests. The Americans have defeated both Italy and Britain in Venice trophy matches, but now trail both these rival squads largely because they do not seem able to score heavily against weaker teams.

The Canadian women's team has been doing extremely well and has been challenging for a top position in the last few days. However, on the diagramed deal, a Canadian pair fell into a trap devised for them by Marilyn Johnson, of Houston, one of the greatest American women players.

After a normal bidding sequence, as shown, West would have guaranteed the defeat of the contract if she had led a low heart or one of the unbid suits. The unbid major suit, spades, would have been a highly effective choice.

The bidding sequence produced by North-South in principle promises at least four clubs. If South held a flat distribution she would presumably have taken other action unless her suit was clubs—opening one diamond, or raising one heart, or rebidding one spade.

West's decision to lead a low club was therefore dubious, but it was not necessarily fatal. Miss Johnson captured the ten with the queen and considered her prospects. There were now eight sure tricks, with a fair chance that the red suits would provide a ninth.

A direct attempt to develop another club trick was almost certain to fail, for the defenders would surely seize the opportunity to shift to spades. So South decided to put them off the scent. She led a spade to the ten, losing to the queen.

East could have judged that South held five clubs, since West's lead of the three could not be from a five-card suit. She might therefore have detected an odor of a red herring. But it was difficult to return a spade away from the king.

East therefore returned the club six and West happily took three club tricks. She was less happy when she found that she had thereby established Miss Johnson's ninth trick, and that both sides had been carefully leading the suit that the opposing side needed to develop.

Turn kids on to real grass

This summer nice city kids will get into some really good grass. The kind that tickles your toes when you walk through it barefoot. The kind a kid would never get to experience if there wasn't a you and there wasn't a Fresh Air Fund.

Each summer you and the Fresh Air Fund give thousands of city kids two weeks in the country. Two weeks when the grass, the sun and the fresh air can work their wonders. And give a kid a clear head for the rest of the year.

Real grass doesn't cost much. Just $30 buys a kid two weeks' worth. But even 30¢ can help.

So please help again now.

Mr. Nabokov on the Brink

By ANATOLE BROUARD

DETAILS OF A SUNSET. By Vladimir Nabokov. Translated from the Russian by Dmitri Nabokov in collaboration with the author. 178 pages, McGraw-Hill $3.95.

"I think that here lies the sense of literary creation: to portray ordinary objects as they will be reflected in the kindly mirrors of future times; to find in the objects around us the fragrant tenderness that only posterity will discern and appreciate in the far off times when every trifle of our plain everyday life will become exquisite and festive in its own right..." This is Vladimir Nabokov, writing in 1925, when he was more in love with life and literature than with himself. At 26, he was possessed by the magical properties of the world around him.

"Now and then the water gurgles and gurgles in its hidden pipes as if sobs were rising to the throat of the house." "And why does no one notice that on the dullest street every house is different, and what a profusion there is, on buildings, on furniture, on every object, of seemingly useless ornaments—yes, useless, but full of distasteful sacrificial enchantment." These are the sentences he wrote then and in the next few years.

The Satisfaction of Being

One story in "Details of a Sunset," his latest collection to be translated into English, is a brilliant example of that pure satisfaction of being that Mr. Nabokov once experienced. It is called "A Letter That Never Reached Russia." The letter, to a lover whom the protagonist has not seen in eight years, takes the form, in order to avoid painful reminiscences, of a rumination on Berlin as he walks its streets at night. After describing the city with a poetry that is disguised expression of his suspended love, he ends with this fine paragraph:

"Listen: I am ideally happy. My happiness is a kind of challenge. As I wander along the streets and the squares and the paths by the canal, absently sensing the lips of dampness through my worn soles, I carry proudly my ineffable happiness. The centuries will roll by, and school boys will yawn over the history of our upheavals; everything will pass, but my happiness, dear, my happiness will remain, in the moist reflection of a street lamp, in the cautious bend of stone steps that descend into the canal's black waters, in the smiles of a dancing couple, in everything with which God so generously surrounds human loneliness."

One can also feel in this story, and in many passages in "Details of a Sunset," the romance of cities, as well as of people, cities with as many moods as the most capricious woman or impulsive man. "How out of time to nature, to the trees and the buildings, the people are walking!" Violet Paget complained in one of her books on art. In "A Letter That Never Reached Russia," the protagonist is perfectly in time with his nature and his city. His imagination dances to its rhythms, like a man dancing alone in a shabby rented room in a foreign place, his movements reviewing some half-submerged reflex of happiness.

The title story of "Details of a Sunset" also celebrates the sheer joy of perception. The hero of this story, a young man about to be married, is drunk with toasts to his Klara and with the transfiguring power of the sunset, which temporarily stands in for her as he walks toward her house. It is a pity that Mr. Nabokov could not resist encumbering this piece with a gratuitously violent ending—one that seems to be merely an excuse for another, colder sort of virtuosity.

Virtuosity and sentimentality are strange bedfellows, yet they are made to lie down together in "The Return of Chorb." Chorb's wife has been killed during their honeymoon, as a result of touching in her all-encompassing enthusiasm, a fallen telephone wire that is too vehemently alive even for her. And now Chorb, in his desolation, imagines that, if he were to retrace in reverse the course of their short-lived idyll, "her image would grow immortal and replace her forever." This is one of those stories whose plot makes you feel that you're being led, blindfolded and unwilling, to a destination you have no desire to reach.

The Triumph of Virtuosity

"Christmas" is sentimental too, but the virtuosity triumphs this time. A man is grieving for the young son he has just lost. He goes to the boy's study, reads his diary, looks at his collection of butterflies and moths. He gathers up a few prized possessions, including a large cocoon, and carries them from this cold room to the bedside of another. As he sits there, suffering the awful "burden and pressure of human consciousness," the cocoon, fiddled by the fire, opens, and a wrinkled Atacus moth emerges. As the "fan-pleated veins... the velvety fringes..." unfurl and the moth emerges, so, too, does the epiphany.

"The Reunion," about a painful meeting between two mismatched brothers after a separation of 10 years, shows that the author can write a good, workaday short story as well as the next man. "The Doorbell" is solid and unsurprising also, a study of mother-son ambivalence that might easily have satisfied Partisan Review 20 years after it was written.

In this collection, superior to "The Russian Beauty," which came later, Mr. Nabokov stands on the brink of his talent. After finishing "Details of a Sunset," there is one reader, at least, who wishes the author would follow his character Chorb's example, that he might retrace the details of his "honeymoon" with literature in an effort to find again that enthusiasm for people and their imperfections that once seemed to promise so much.

The Making of an Issue

By Tom Wicker

The Democratic majority in the House has proposed a five-year economic plan that if incorporated in the 1976 platform would draw clearly the major issue—perhaps the only real issue—between the two parties. That issue is whether the nation's highest economic priority should be full employment or a low rate of inflation.

Not that the two necessarily are mutually exclusive. There is no automatic link between high employment and high inflation. But the Ford Administration's policy has been to pursue a slow rate of economic recovery and expansion through reduced Federal spending, with unemployment remaining at 6 percent or more for the rest of this decade. The stated rationale has been to avoid inflation.

The Democrats in the House, in contrast, are proposing to create 12 million new jobs by 1981, thus reducing unemployment to 3 percent of the adult workforce. They believe the added tax revenues from those who will be put to work, as well as the resulting increase in gross national product and decrease in unemployment and welfare benefits, will be sufficient to keep the long-term rate of inflation manageable.

There's a lot to be said for the Democratic proposal. Unemployment at the levels contemplated by the Ford Administration is socially crippling; no one can really estimate the results in poverty, alienation, crime, drug addiction, wasted lives that might have been useful. In that sense, even the Democratic plan may not go far enough; 3 percent adult unemployment could leave unacceptably high levels of unemployment among young people and minority groups. At the accepted rule of thumb, it would mean 6 percent black unemployment, for instance, and an even higher rate among perhaps the most volatile and critical group, black teen-agers, unless some special effort was made to put them to work.

Economically, the massive Federal outlays that would be required to stimulate the economy sufficiently and provide the necessary public service jobs (before the expected increase in income tax revenues), not to mention the $10 billion tax cut the Democrats proposed for 1978, would almost surely be inflationary in the short run. While the Democrats also talked bravely of raising vast new revenues through tax reform (closing loopholes), that's been tried before and found politically difficult, if not impossible. The logic of the Democratic proposal, therefore, points straight at a rigorous system of wage and price controls—which is mentioned in the five-year plan only as a sort of last resort. It's more likely to have to be a first resort.

IN THE NATION

Politically, the House proposal raises several questions. While its authors clearly hope it will provide the cornerstone of the Democratic platform and of a Democratic Administration's program beginning in 1977, it was worked out entirely separately from the Presidential nominating campaign. Thus, before the identity and views of the nominee are known, the Democrats in the House are attempting to set his course and influence his campaign in a decisive way.

If the nominee should be Jimmy Carter of Georgia, the front-runner, it is by no means clear that he and the House program would be entirely compatible. Mr. Carter's own economic pronouncements have not been quite so expansive; the "big government" aspects of the House proposals may not mesh well with his anti-Washington strategy; and he has given much evidence that he will more nearly want to articulate his own program than accept one tailor-made for him by a Congressional majority he has not hesitated to criticize for lack of leadership.

On two counts, however, the House program appears to echo Mr. Carter. He, too, has been espousing tax reform aimed at reducing the burden on low- and middle-income taxpayers, and has been calling for even more sweeping reform of the Federal bureaucracy than the Congressional Democrats did.

Presumably, Gov. Jerry Brown of California, if he believes his own "less is more" rhetoric, might also have some difficulty with the House platform. Representative Morris Udall and Senator Hubert Humphrey probably would find it much more to their liking—indecisive, its centerpiece is the Humphrey-Hawkins full-employment bill.

But candidates usually find some way to live with platforms they may not like, or entirely accept. The more serious political question is whether a massive spending, big-government set of priorities like that proposed by the House Democrats will be attractive to an electorate that by most standards of measurement has lost faith in government programs and thinks the Federal Government already is spending too much, running deficits that are too big, and doing too much to help the unemployed, the welfare recipients, and the minority groups.

At least, however, the House Democrats have focused attention, if only briefly, on one of the real issues between what is left of the two parties. After the inanities of the Democratic primary battle and the muscle-flexing demagoguery of the Republicans, it's a relief to have a line drawn that means something.

The Henry James Gang

lack of popular success and movie sales. Thus, when Henry Kissinger offered his publisher "Remembrances of Flings Past," his seven-volume novel about a brilliant persecuted Secretary of State with a German accent, it was sent back with instructions for Kissinger to "put more sex into it."

The result was the famous sleeping-bag scene, set in the aisle of a giant Government jet at 35,000 feet as it speeds over the Indian Ocean on a mission to prevent a dangerous shift in the balance of power. ("Did you feel the earth move?" she asked. "It was not the earth moving, little one. It was the balance of power shifting," he said. "Tell me again about the great Metternich," she begged.)

Kissinger's success was followed almost immediately by Ronald Reagan's blockbuster, "Maverick," the story of a deceptively youthful-looking former movie actor who is vacationing at a California resort town when it is suddenly menaced by fierce schools of giant welfare mothers who dart out of the surf and consume whole taxpayers in single bites.

Although the climax, in which Reagan's hero, Donald Deegan, pursues them by canoe until they are trapped in the Panama Canal, then saves the resort's tourist season by blowing up the locks, seemed implausible in print, it created such a thrilling conclusion to the film version that Reagan took in 20 million votes at the box office alone.

Thereafter, of course, there was no staying politicians from the type-writer. For months at a stretch, the Senate was unable to muster a quorum because so many Senators were busy elsewhere working on their novels about Senators who saved the nation from welfare mothers, cuts in the military budget, shifts in the balance of power and phlebitis.

Observing that politics opened the road to literary fame and riches, writers left their lonely rooms and began talking nonsense to large crowds in public places, which was not only much more fun, a lot less lonely and much easier than writing, but also got them elected to public offices ornamented by steady income.

Soon the great bulk of the government was made up of writers who had gone into politics in order to taste literary success. Saul Bellow was President of the United States and Norman Mailer Secretary of State. Jimmy Breslin was Vice President, Woody Allen was running the Post Office, William Buckley was Mayor of Chicago and David Halberstam was Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Since all these people were very busy putting their forthcoming best-sellers in shape for publication, they were very irritable most of the time and easily became infuriated by any criticism that did not come from their editors.

They were particularly sensitive to criticism that they were too busy writing novels to govern the country, a criticism which was beginning to be heard with insistent frequency from the great writers like Agnew, Ehrlichman, Meany, Beame, Kissinger and Reagan, all of whom relieved the boredom of their rich retirement by writing columns or delivering television commentary.

With publication of Spiro Agnew's novel about the tribulations of a fictional Vice President of the United States and John Ehrlichman's novel about a brilliant White House assistant to a President suffering from phlebitis, altered its golden age of lit-crits.

Who Killed Free Tuition?

By Fred M. Hechinger

dino spent his days in efforts to persuade the university's individual campuses to agree to draconian cuts of existing programs and complete elimination of some of the weaker or redundant ones. Such pleas, however, may well have further undermined support for free tuition.

The prospect of ever more brutal cutbacks has sharply divided the university's academic community. Special-interest groups, mainly among the faculty and administration, but also among some students, have been ready to rush to the lifeboats in order to save their own schools, departments and jobs, even at the cost of throwing free tuition overboard. Given the fiscal extremity, it is not unreasonable to ask what point there is in saving free tuition at the expense of cannibalizing the university.

Among the students, there is a difference of view between the poor and the low-income middle class. The former will continue to enjoy free tuition as the state's financial assistance plan picks up their tab; the latter may have to pay part or all of the new charge. Hardest hit will be families in the $11,000 to $17,000 income brackets. But this constituency, though disgruntled, has little political clout.

Politicians stress the availability of extensive scholarship aid, in the hope that the unpleasant side effects of the fiscal medicine they are dispensing won't be felt until their part in the action has been forgotten.

The worst of these side effects is that part-time students are not eligible for the state's tuition assistance. Since part-time study is socially, economically and even pedagogically extraordinarily beneficial, forcing large numbers to study full-time or not at all would be disastrous.

The only way to prevent such a disaster would be a waiver of tuition for those part-time students who would be eligible for state subsidy if they went to college full-time. This would, of course, further reduce those anticipated revenues on which the advocates of tuition base their optimistic budget estimates.

In the current jargon, however, the bottom line has long since ceased to be negotiable. Those who control the purse strings have issued their ultimatum: no tuition—no rescue. This means that the ax would fall so heavily on so many departments and people that former staunch free-tuition supporters have rushed to accept tuition as the lesser evil. Moreover, there is logic in the argument that fees have been rising rapidly anyway, and that by not calling them tuition, the university deprives its students of state and Federal subsidies.

Politicians and even members of the Board of Higher Education whose earlier pledges of undying support for free tuition are a matter of public record have been assured by Albany and City Hall that they stand released of that particular loyalty oath. In view of the Governor's and the Mayor's surrender, the trend in recent weeks has been to switch rather than fight. Mr. Giardino's honorable last-ditch campaign to save the principle through the most severe austerity has become a lonely, losing battle.

Once free tuition is buried, the politicians will want it to be forgotten. Others who take a longer view of higher education's kinship to America as the land of opportunity will want to keep its memory alive, not as one more oddity in the oostalgia attic, but as a sensible and realistic option for a more affluent, more confident and more generous day.

Santa Fe PLUS =

On the tracks... 12,500 miles of railway (5,500 miles of it all welded rail); plus 19,800 miles of trucking; 2,700 miles of pipeline.

Along the tracks... real estate, plant sites, construction plus Santa Fe natural resources producing 47,000 barrels of oil a day; along with 300 to 400 million tons of low-sulphur coal ready for development in New Mexico and lumber from 630,000 acres of forest land in Texas and Louisiana.

Santa Fe is not a Johnny-come-lately with diversified operations. We've been developing real estate for 101 years, operating a busy truck line for 51 years, lumber for 40 years, in petroleum production for 79 years and managing coal properties for 90 years.

All this and 108 years of running a railroad. Today, there are more than 40 companies in our family.

The name Santa Fe covers it all—progressive freight transportation plus natural resources, plus real estate and construction.

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL

INDIANAPOLIS—It was a day ill-designed to lure Julius Caesar from his battle tent. But it did not daunt the band of slightly soggy latter-day centurions manning a motley array of homemade catapults in a vacant Indiana lot.

About 50 youngsters, some of whom had hirsoucked in the lot during an overnight downpour, were busy tooling up the war machines they had con-fected from wood, pails, ropes, winches, beaps of rocks, oil drums and other garage detritus.

They were students of Latin and were participating in the fifth national catapult contest last weekend under the supervision of Bernard Barcio, a genial man with a big black Jerry Colonna mustache.

Mr. Barcio started his students building catapults 10 years ago and, he says, the idea has taken bold in Latin classes in other states. He mentioned Michigan, New York, Ohio, and California, as well as Indiana.

As he spoke, the students banged and hammered on their array of catapults, some of which emulated Rome via Rube Goldberg. Clearly, though, it was more diverting than conjugating irregular verbs.

The free-wheeling designs were not as anarchic as they had first appeared. There were rules, Mr. Barcio said, based on a brief discussion of catapults by the ancient scribe Vitruvius in his work, "De Architectura."

"They have to use authentic Roman power, he said, 'twisted ropes, bent wood or counterweights. How they use that power is up to them."

Short on Accuracy

A variety of catapults were put in operation—some of the stoops blooping forward a scant few feet. Others inadvertently buried their projectiles back-wards toward a little knot of parents on lawn chairs who kept their heads up. "We've never been able to get accuracy," said Mr. Barcio, who said he thought the Romans weren't terribly accurate either and contended themselves with barraging the enemy willy-nilly in their gothic keeps.

One bents wood contraption attempted to unleash a rock encased in a breach cloth, which arced out and slumped to the wet ground.

The grandest of the catapults belonged to Mary Hyde, a senior Latin student, who, with some classmates and her father, David, had been hoing Zephyrus—the Roman's name for the god of the west wind—for three years.

Zephyrus, permanently installed in the field, is a huge, graceful-looking contrivance that resembles the mast on a sailing vessel.

Finally, Gaul Blaster II, a 100-pound rock-wad loaded on Zephyrus's sling. Gaul Blaster I had crumbled ignominiously after being hurled a meager three feet.

Mr. Barcio manned his bullhorn. "Our goal for 10 years has been to throw a 100-pound rock 100 yards. This is a historic event," he said.

The contrivance let fly and the huge boulder, accompanied by a whirling rush of air, soared across the field into a clump of bushes. "Ohhhhh," gasped the crowd.

Gaul Blaster II exceeded the vaulted ambitions of Miss Hyde and made 187 yards.

As a visitor departed the muddy field, imperfections were being discussed, adjustments were made in the two dozen devices competing with each other, more bloopers occurred and occasionally a projectile whistled across the grassward.

The Lakewood (Calif.) High School Band during practice outside school in the last Rose Bowl Parade and would like to return the visit this recently. The band marched jointly with the Lakewood, N.J., school band a year, but is hampered by funding and a school district limit on travel.

School Bands Searching for the Right Notes (Money)

By LES LEDBETTER

LAKEWOOD, Calif.—High school bands across the country are marching to two different tempos these days—one upbeat musically and the other downright financially.

The popularity of the bands in the schools and their communities is growing, along with their competence and the demands placed upon them. But rising costs and tightened school budgets are forcing student musicians and their adult supporters to spend more time than ever in fund-raising activities, especially if they hope to travel.

In one striking example of enterprize, students in Lakewood, N.J., spent a year raising $61,000 to finance a trip here so they could appear with their California counterparts in the Rose Bowl on New Year's Day. The New Jersey students and their supporters staged rallies, benefit plays and concerts to the quest for funds.

Their kinship with the band here continues. Several of the California students, reminiscing the other day about the Rose Bowl performance, said the joy of being in the parade was heightened by the fact that their sister band had flown 3,000 miles to be with them.

"Everybody seemed to be so close," said Janet Buxman, a 17-year-old flute and piccolo player. "I think more schools should have a chance to meet each other this way."

The California students would like to fly east to repay the visit if obstacles including funding and a school district limit on travel can be overcome.

Many students in other bands around the country attributed the increasing popularity of bands to the special camaraderie that develops among the members. Others told of their happiness in being able to display their talents for their families and friends as well as huge audiences of strangers.

"Band people are unique. It's like living with two different families, one at home and one in the band."

Leroy Jones a trumpet player with the Marching Hundred band in New Orleans, described his once-in-a-lifetime experience performing in the 1971 Super Bowl as a young Louis Armstrong on an old-style cornet.

"It was real nice," he said. "My parents told all the kind-folk and those who couldn't come could watch it on television."

Despite the personal pleasure from these experiences, many students have had to combine musical talent with business savvy to help their bands meet the demands for free performances.

More successful groups have been able to fly to Europe, Mexico, Hawaii and Canada. These trips, however, are the exception. In the current economic climate for most schools, keeping the bands in fudds for instruments and uniforms remains a challenge.

"It falls on the students, parents and the band instructor to beat the bushes selling candy," said Richard A. Dickson band director at Wolfson Senior High School in Jacksonville, Fla.

"Bands are a stepchild," said Mr. Dickson, who also noted that Wolfson's contribution to the band's annual budget of $6,000 was only $185 this year, down from $250 last year.

Joe Barton, a 16-year-old trumpet player, agreed with his leader that the band does not get the support it should from the school community. But he said, "I don't mind selling candy for the band; it makes it seem more important."

In New York City, where schools have suffered severe financial cutbacks, bands have particularly felt the pinch.

Uniforms a Problem
Students at Manhattan's Martin Luther King High School, near Lincoln Center, for example, have had to forgo uniforms and travel and must share instruments in order for the band to survive, according to Marvin Gottesfeld, the school's music department chairman.

Even in more affluent communities, the rising costs of uniforms, instruments and travel are creating a financial crunch that is being spanned only with booster clubs, special sales and other patchwork financial schemes.

"Next year is the year for our new uniforms and we're keeping our fingers crossed that the school board will allocate the money," said Paula Crider, band director at Crockett High School in Austin, Tex.

The current uniforms are so threadbare, said Miss Crider, that "during the last football season I had at least four kids who came to me before half-time with split seals."

She explained that the Texas Attorney General ruled last year that charging students an annual $7.50 uniform fee was illegal and that the school reduced its funding to the band from $1,600 last year to nothing this year.

In Iowa, as well, a state law prevents West Des Moines from spending $45,000 on much needed uniforms for the Valley High School Band's 248 members.

But, according to the band director, Dan Peterson, the Valley Band Boosters, composed mostly of band members' parents, "are planning to buy the uniforms next year" after raising the money this year to send the band to Philadelphia for a Fourth of July celebration.

Wealthy Area Affected
Even in wealthy Grosse Pointe, Mich., said Russell Reed, music department director at Grosse Pointe South High School, "in the last two years we have had to help finance ourselves through the sales of citrus fruits at Christmas because we haven't had sufficient funds from the school."

Although the cost of equipment has risen dramatically in the last few years, there is evidence that it is the popular and ever-growing number of out-of-town, out-of-state, out-of-country band trips that have added most of the financial burden.

The Valley Band plays more than 100 times a year at diverse events, such as Expo '77 in Montreal, the Cotton and Rose Bowl parades and the Indianapolis 500.

The Deerfield (Ill.) High School band went to play at Walt Disney World in Florida earlier this year after raising $18,000 by selling crates of oranges and grapefruit and selling their own album, entitled "Football Championship Memory."

The Palmetto High School band from Dade County, Fla., at almost the same time, went to Hawaii after extensive fund raising.

But if the costs have risen and the demands have increased, the reasons for belonging to the school bands seem to be the same as for any school activity: companionship, experience and the chance to perform.

Members of the Wolfson band shared one of those rare experiences that make band membership special last fall when they were asked to play for President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt during his visit.

"They wanted us to play the Egyptian National Anthem," recalled Joe Barton, the band director. Mr. Dickson, located a book with the anthem in the local library and the school's musical theory unit transposed the music into a band score. When President Sadat arrived in Jacksonville, Mr. Barton, "the anthem was correct and we were O.K."

The Major Events of the Day

- International
 - On the third successive day of anti-Israeli rioting on the West Bank, an Arab youth was shot and killed yesterday by Israeli soldiers, the second Arab slain by the Israelis in two days. The youth was shot in Kalandia as he watched a fight between two Israeli soldiers and a crowd of Arabs that had attacked the Israelis' truck. The continuing disturbances tended to confirm the fear expressed recently by Israeli leaders that the riots are growing progressively worse and more difficult to control. In Nablus, where a girl was slain on Sunday, thousands of people thronged the streets, waving Palestinian flags, chanting slogans and shouting "murderers" at Israeli soldiers on patrol. [Page 1, Column 4.]
 - Libya, a supporter of the most extreme elements within the Palestinian camp, openly entered the Lebanese situation in an attempt to mediate between Syria and the various leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Maj. Abdul Salem Jalloud, the Libyan Prime Minister, arrived in Beirut from Damascus with Yasir Arafat, the head of the P.L.O. Major Jalloud was understood to have brought Syrian assurances to Palestinian and leftist Moslem leaders that the Syrian intervention in Lebanon was not directed against them and would not deprive them of their freedom of action, contrary to what many of them have charged. [1:1.]
 - The British pound fell to less than $1.80 in London for the first time before making a slight recovery on the strength of modest purchases of pounds by the Bank of England. It dropped to $1.799 at noon before closing fractionally above $1.80. [1:2-3.]
- National
 - The conviction of John D. Ehrlichman was unanimously affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals for his role in the 1971 break-in by the White House "plumbers" of the office of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg's former psychiatrist. The court also unanimously upheld the conviction of Mr. Ehrlichman's co-defendant, G. Gordon Liddy, who worked for both the White House, where Mr. Ehrlichman was President Nixon's chief domestic adviser, and the 1972 Nixon re-election campaign. But the court, by a 2-to-1 vote, reversed the convictions of two other defendants in the break-in trial, Bernard L.

 - Negotiators said they were close to an agreement on a revised New York City transit contract that would the cost-of-living increases to productivity savings and limit the size of the transit employees' raises in any year. In addition, they said, the formula for computing the cost-of-living raises would be reduced—and the employees would get smaller increases than they had expected—to help the city match the terms of the transit contract when contracts with municipal employees expire on June 30. [1:5.]
 - Representative Bella S. Abzug announced her candidacy for the Senate, seeking to replace James L. Buckley, the Conservative Republican, whom she called "Lord Buckley." "We can no longer afford to regard the United States Senate, as so many do, as kind of House of Lords, where economic aristocrats preach sacrifice to the rest of us," she said at a news conference. She observed that there were no women among the 100 Senators. "People of both sexes and all parties can, and do, feel the injustice of that," she said. [1:8.]

Farmingdale Teachers Approve a Pact on Pay Increases, and Return to Work

The New York Times
DALE L. L. May
In the Farmingdale district voted unanimously to accept a contract and end their strike started May 6.

The contract provides for salary increases for other teachers in the district, and was enthusiastically approved by the members of the Federation of Teachers.

Aroused shout of approval at the end of the 10-hour bargaining session, the teachers returned to their classrooms in Farmingdale.

The 471 pupils have returned to school with a curriculum of administrative and personnel, substituted.

Both the union and school administration expressed satisfaction with the contract, which provides among other things, for a total package increase of $750,000 in the 1976-77 school year.

"I feel it's a fair settlement to both the teachers and the taxpayers of the community," said John Regan, spokesman for the seven-member school board.

He estimated that the salary increase was 6.09 percent in the first year. The teachers will receive a 6 percent increase in the second year, plus or minus half the difference in the cost of living.

There will be no increase in class size, which now ranges from 25 to 30.

Under the contract that just expired, salaries ranged from $10,778 a year to start (with a bachelor's degree) to $24,458 (with a doctorate at the top step). An administration spokesman said 50 percent of the professional staff earned more than $19,000 a year.

In announcing the terms of the new contract, which will run from June 30, 1976, to June 30, 1978, Kenneth Deedy, president of the 870-member union, said he felt it was the best that could be achieved under present conditions.

The tax rate on realty in the school district for this year is $18.07 for each $100 of assessed valuation, the fourth highest in Nassau County. The budget for the 1976-77 school year, which did not take into account any negotiated settlement, calls for a tax rate of $17.62.

However, because each $100 increase in the budget means about 10 cents more on the tax rate, it will mean an additional 75 cents in the tax rate. Mr. Regan estimated that as a result of the contract settlement the average homeowner in the district would have to pay $18 more a year in school taxes.

Ready of Farmingdale teachers' union, and aiding, member of the Board of Education who strike, outside Mill Lane Junior High School.

Other Provisions

Other terms in the contract include an increase in life insurance benefits paid for by the district and a $10,000 bonus incentive to those who retire before their normal retirement date.

One major point the teachers had been seeking was to retain as many as possible of the 67 teaching positions the board planned to terminate. Under the contract, the teachers, who are laid off will be rehired on the basis of seniority when vacancies occur that the school board desires to fill.

Mr. Regan said the district won an important point when it succeeded in having a job-security clause removed from the contract, which had guaranteed employment for the term of the contract.

Because the strike violated the state's Taylor Law, the teachers are subject to fines of $50 a day for each day on strike. However, instead of being fined for 14 days, the teachers will be permitted to teach on Friday, May 28 normally part of the Memorial Day weekend, thus reducing by one the number of days for which they will be fined.

'Lunch Is Served' on New Haven Trains

By EDWARD C. BURKS

Son's on. And there are sandwiches and cocktails, too, for the new lunch service started yesterday on a trial basis by the Metropolitan Transportation Authority on the 12:05 P.M. train out of Grand Central for New Haven.

While Jack Tobin, bartender, presided at the long bar, Mr. Yulich served Corinne Browne of Woodstock, N.Y., with the first portion of the hero sandwich. After that, the car was busy on a cash-and-carry basis.

The menu includes: orange or tomato juice, 35 cents; hot soup, 25 cents; ham and cheese or roast beef sandwich, $1.25; Danish pastry, 40 cents; cake, 40 cents; soft drink (12-ounce can), 40 cents; coffee, tea or hot chocolate, 25 cents; alcoholic drinks, $1.50; beer and ale, 75 cents.

One of the New Haven Line's new Cosmopolitan cafe-bar-lounge cars normally used for breakfast snacks in the morning and for cocktails on evening homebound commuter is now also serving as a lunch wagon on the 12:05 for the 72-mile trip to New Haven.

Mr. Yulich said that riders planning an evening in New York could take the 3:45 out of New Haven and have cocktails and sandwiches on the way.

A 30-day test of the lunch service will help "broaden the utilization of these attractive cafe cars," Mr. Yulich said. If riders warm to the idea, it may spread. The New Haven Line currently has 4 cafe-bar cars in service on morning and evening rush-hour trains.

The 12:05 stops at Stamford, Noroton Heights, Darien, Norwalk, Westport, Fairfield, Bridgeport and New Haven. On its return run the cafe-bar is on the 3:45 P.M. from New Haven, due in Grand Central at 5:35 P.M.

e Protests, Judge Allows on 63d St. Subway Station

Judge Marvin E. statement prepared by the Federal Department of Transportation, a codefendant in the suit, was "imperfect, to be sure," adding: "But its defects could by no means justify halting the construction of the 63d Street station."

The judge then vacated the temporary restraining order that he had issued last Wednesday and that had held up the work along 63d Street.

Raymond J. Donovan, executive vice president of the Schivo Construction Company, the contractor for the authority, said about the decision: "I'm just glad the thing is off the streets and into the judicial process. Delay is costly to the public and to us." Protests and sit-ins took place at the construction site last week, sometimes resulting in violence.

Commenting on Judge Frankel's action, Albert E. Butzel, the lawyer for the community groups, said their situation looked "grave."

He said he took issue with Judge Frankel's statement that the residents "should have been stirred themselves closer to the time three years ago when the environmental impact statement was published."

The residents, Mr. Butzel said, had no reason at that time to question the impact statement.

The transportation authority said it would await the outcome of today's hearing before commenting.

Court Rules Kiwanis Is Private

The Appellate Division of State Supreme Court in Brooklyn has upheld a court ruling in Mineola, L.I., that Kiwanis International is a private club and thus can bar membership by women. The policy had been challenged by the Kiwanis Club of Great Neck and by several women who have been allowed to become members of the service organization there. The Appellate Division ruled that as a private organization Kiwanis International was not subject to the 14th and 15th Amendments. Justice J. Erwin Shapiro dissented.

435 Found Cheating on Welfare

The latest computer check by the Human Resources Administration turned up 435 welfare recipients who concealed other incomes and will now be struck from the rolls or whose allowances will be cut, Administrator J. Henry Smith announced. He reported that thus far this year the computer checks had resulted in the closing of 2,388 cases and 1,468 allowance reductions, for a total saving of $7.3 million.

From the Police Blotter:

Three banks were held up by robbers passing threatening notes to tellers. A Citibank branch at 220 East 42d Street was robbed of $2,000 by the same man who escaped with $350 seven weeks ago; another branch at 3399 Boston Road in the Wakefield section of the Bronx was robbed of $585. A woman robber stole $2,800 from the Harlem Savings Bank at 708 West 181st Street in Washington Heights. . . . Sal Saputo, the owner of Gino's Pizzeria at 158-46 Cross Bay Boulevard in Howard Beach, Queens, and three other persons were robbed of a total of $1,122 by three men, one armed with a handgun, who then fled in a car. . . . A 50-year-old woman was shot five times as she left a bar at 1657 Madison Avenue at 110th Street by an unknown male patron waiting outside the bar. The victim, Mari E. Rosario of 51 Backus Place, the Bronx, was admitted in fair condition to Metropolitan Hospital.

Health Unit Studying Reduction In Sites for Open-Heart Surgery

By DAVID BIRD

New York City's new Health Systems Agency, set up under Federal law to make sure health care is delivered efficiently, indicated yesterday that one of its first targets would be what it called the excessive number of open-heart surgery units in hospitals here.

Agency officials said the large number of open-heart surgery units—there are more than 20—were costing the taxpayers too much money and endangering patients' lives.

"We're going to start bringing up some delicate subjects," Dr. Lowell E. Bellin said at a news conference at the Carnegie Endowment Center, 345 East 46th Street, where the new agency's goals were outlined.

Dr. Bellin, the city's Health Commissioner and chairman of the executive committee of the new agency, said one of the "delicate subjects" was that "there are too many open-heart surgery units where the death rate is high."

The death rate is high, he said, because there is not enough need for that many units and the doctors in them cannot keep up their skills.

If not enough operations are performed, Dr. Bellin said, "you don't maintain your skill."

Some hospitals are reluctant to close open-heart surgery units because the units can generate money through expensive operations often financed by government money.

Dr. Bellin would not name the hospitals or give out statistics on death rates, but Joseph T. Lynam, the new agency's executive director, said that "within a month to six weeks we should have a report out on open-heart surgery."

The new Health Systems Agency was set up to control health delivery in all sectors—municipal, voluntary and proprietary facilities. It has power over nongovernmental institutions because it can recommend the withholding of government funds that are now necessary to any institution's operation.

One of 200 Units

The agency which covers New York City, is one of some 200 health-planning units being set up across the country. It is an independent, nonprofit agency made up of consumers and those who provide health care, as well as city officials.

Mr. Lynam stressed the agency's goal of making sure that "high-quality medical care was accessible to all."

"This means no barriers to obtaining this care, either explicit or subtle, created by history, social status, institutional arrangements, race or any other contrivance," he added.

But the city's concern with the rising cost of medical care, much of which is coming from the overburdened city budget, was stressed by Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti.

"We have a [health] system where costs have soared," Mr. Zuccotti said, "and where duplication and waste exact an intolerable toll. We have 40,000 hospital beds; perhaps as many as 10 percent of these would not be needed in a system that was both more humane and more efficient."

Mr. Zuccotti repeatedly stressed the cost theme. "For example," he said, "the average cost per hospital admission here is $1,700; the national average is $1,000. We can do better. We must."

'Village' Park Starts Drive on Dog Filth

By BARBARA CAMPBELL

During the day, infants, toddlers and young children play happily in the sand pit and in the dirt under the trees with their pails and shovels in Abingdon Square Park in Greenwich Village. But at night, dogs are taken into the playground to relieve themselves where the children have played during the day.

"The filth of it turns my stomach," said Frances Davis, who, with other parents, nursery-school directors and concerned neighbors, has formed a volunteer "vigilante" group, the Association to Improve Abingdon Square Park, to watch the playground late at night and to call the police whenever dog owners take their pets into the playground.

A spokesman for the city's Parks Department said that dogs' soiling of sand in playgrounds and parks was a serious problem all over the city. "One of our managers is seriously considering emptying the sand boxes and strongly advising parents not to let their children use them," the spokesman said.

He noted that it was against the law to permit dogs to run unleashed in parks or to soil park property, and he urged people seeing such violations to call the police. Parks Department employees are not authorized to enforce laws, he said.

The volunteer watch at Abingdon Square is only the latest and, currently, most concentrated expression of public outrage over the dog problem in public places in the city. From time to time, groups—ranging from block associations to citywide committees—have mounted campaigns to fight the problem, and there have been emotional confrontations between dog owners and their opponents.

Some of the volunteers at Abingdon Square keep watch on the playground between 11 P.M. and 2 A.M., a favored meeting time for the dog owners, from apartments overlooking the park, which is situated on Bleeker between Bank and 11th Streets. Others sit in a nearby plaza, and still others patrol the playground.

Patrol Cars Flagged Down

When the police fail to respond to their calls, the volunteers flag down passing patrol cars and demand that the dog owners be given summonses. Members of the group also have asked dog owners to leave the park.

Mrs. Davis was keeping vigil recently with two other volunteers, Ronald and Patricia Schnitzer, and as they looked down on the triangular playground, they saw dogs straining at their leashes, pulling their owners toward the playground.

"Until I actually saw this," said Mrs. Davis, who has two young children who play in the park every day "I guess I could never really believe that people would bring their dogs in, knowing children played there the next day."

The Schnitzers, however, said that they had called the police "dozens of times," even before the volunteer group was formed. "It's not a matter of no-dog owners against dog owners," said Mr. Schnitzer, who has a poodle, but "it's a matter of the health and welfare of children coming before dogs."

One dog owner told a parent that she used the playground instead of a nearby dog-run because she did not want her dog to catch worms from the other dogs. "We wanted to know," said Mrs. Davis, "whether she cared what our kids caught from her dog."

The police have been reluctant to answer calls from the volunteers. When they do respond, they do not issue summonses. Francis McLoughlin, a Deputy Police Commissioner, said that issuing such summonses was not a high priority, because the police were needed for more serious offenses.

'Got to Help Ourselves'

"We have got to stop the dogs from using the playground, even if it means staying up all night every night," said Mrs. English Friedberg, who was sitting in the plaza near the playground with two other volunteers at midnight recently. "Nobody else is going to help us, so we've got to help ourselves."

The parents, she said, came face to face with the problem after the park attendant there, who cleaned the sand every morning, was laid off in the spring because of the city's financial pinch.

The parents felt they could no longer watch their children play under the trees and in the sand. Although the attendant has been rehired, the problem of dirty sand remains. Mrs. Davis took samplings of the sand to a laboratory to be tested, and the test indicated that there was "fecal contamination" in the samplings.

The association, Mrs. Davis said, wants to raise money to erect a fence with gates that can be locked at night. She said that volunteers were needed to help the association dig out all of the contaminated sand on Sunday, to truck it away, to help raise money to buy the fence and to help plan a better playground. "We need parents, merchants, teen-agers, old people, considerate dog owners, and anybody else who is as concerned as we are," she said.

"The fact is, there are enough people with talent and skills down here in the village to help our children now."

M.T.A. Is Expanding Its UniTicket System

Encouraged by passenger response to its bus-rail UniTicket introduced at five Long Island Rail Road station last fall, the Metropolitan Transportation Authority will expand the system on June 1 to all 43 L.I.R.R. stations served by the M.T.A.'s Metropolitan Suburban Bus Authority.

Under the UniTicket system a single monthly commutation ticket provides daily bus transportation to and from a given suburban station as well as the round-trip train service to New York at considerable savings.

WANTED, WORK: Young job seekers from low-income families lined up for summer employment at the South Brooklyn Neighborhood Youth Corps headquarters, 130 Clinton Street. A Federal grant of $29 million will provide for 65,000 such jobs this summer for an estimated half-million eligible persons aged 14 to 21. The city's Department of Employment said more than 42,000 had signed up as of last evening and centers throughout the city will continue to register and certify applicants until all the jobs are filled, probably a week from today.

Flindt's Ballet: Puffed Sleeves to Nudity

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

The Royal Danish Ballet, one of the few first-rate companies in the world, opens tonight at the Metropolitan Opera House. This will be its first visit here since 1965 and the first since Flemming Flindt, still one of its principal dancers, became the company's artistic director 10 years ago at the age of 30.

It has been customary to refer to Mr. Flindt as the Royal Danish Ballet's "controversial young director." What is controversial about Mr. Flindt is itself open to debate.

It is true, for instance, that most state-supported companies with the word Royal in their titles do not present their director or his wife in the nude the way Mr. Flindt and Vivi Flindt will be seen briefly in "The Triumph of Death," a Flindt theater piece that bows at the Met on May 27.

Yet the company's tradition of director-choreographer's dancing in his own works dates back to August Bournonville, the great 19th-century choreographer whose legacy gave the company its unique, zesty "Bournonville style."

As Mr. Flindt puts it, the nudity is justified by its dramatic context. After all, he suggested, "It is not right that some people in the company appear nude and that I don't. There should be no classification. In fact one of the girls in the company said, 'If you appear without clothes, I can too.'"

Those in the know are aware that it is not these few minutes of nudity that should create a stir in New York. The real test will come in bow well the Danish company still performs the delicate Romantic ballets by Bournonville which it first started and enchanted foreign audiences on its tours abroad in the 1950's.

The irony of non-Danes acting as watchdogs over a heritage they fear is imperiled by Mr. Flindt's innovations is not lost upon the dynamic, curly-haired director, whose fluent French and fluent English and mod attire might be symbolic of his efforts to mold the Royal Danish Ballet into an internationally minded company with a contemporary outlook. "It is the international balletomanes who want us to be a Bournonville company, pure and perfect," he said. "They would like it to be like a Shakespeare company or a Molière company. I don't think it would be possible to keep a group of dancers doing just Bournonville."

By his own account, Mr. Flindt has sought not to neglect Bournonville (although the system of teaching it has changed), but to balance the repertory with contemporary ballets.

Relating this need to his own experiences as dancer, Mr. Flindt recalled his "defection" from the Danish ballet in 1955 and the 10 years he spent abroad as guest artist and also as a "star dancer" with the Paris Opéra Ballet. "When I was dancing in Paris, Zurich, Vienna," he said, "I was doing 'Swan Lake' and 'Giselle' all the time. It got to the stage where I couldn't watch myself in the mirror any more—with those puffed sleeves and silver in my hair. Here I was going to be 30 and I was still running around like a beautiful pink prince."

It was about this time that Mr. Flindt, needing a change of pace, choreographed his first ballet, "The Lesson," originally done for Danish television in 1963, was adapted from Eugene Ionesco's macabre play of a similar title. A good many of the 30 ballets Mr. Flindt has created as director of the company since 1966 lean toward pessimistic themes.

"I think all of us coming from those Northern countries have a slight tendency toward the depressive," Mr. Flindt said, hastening to point out that he did a "happy" ballet in his "Three Musketeers."

It was also, he stressed, the joyousness of Bournonville that particularly appealed to him. "Bournonville was full of human life. He has a poetic vitality that is down to earth."

"I have been misunderstood," Mr. Flindt said, adding to criticism that he is less interested in the Bournonville ballets than his own or that he has not restored the daily Bournonville classes, in which he himself was trained from the age of 10 to 13.

"People think I don't like the old things," he said. "It's not true. If you move away from your culture, you are left hanging in space. But we also need to get an audience and we need the part of the population that used to come to the Royal Theater and we can do it with works that mirror their own lives and dreams."

More Group Work

On this visit, Americans will find "the company is less of a star company," he said. Linking this aspect to the tone of political life in Denmark, he added, "It has to do with the way the country is developing—more toward group work and away from star adoration."

"Mr. Flindt is, of course, aware that foreign companies are still luring away company members wined on Denmark's tradition of strong male dancing. The New York City Ballet has three Danish-Midwesterners, Peter Schaufuss and Adam Linders.

"Yes," Mr. Flindt said, "still many will leave. It's natural, if you're an ambitious young man and want to try your wings. I'm proud that other companies want them. It proves we're still producing good ballet dancers."

Corporate Angels Also Lose Their Shirts

By LEONARD SLOANE

What does a corporation say when it has lost about a million dollars on a musical that lasted less than a week on Broadway?

In the case of the Coca-Cola company—which was the sole backer of 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue—the Leonard Bernstein-Alan Jay Lerner show about the White House—the answer is nothing. Even though it spoke openly last year about the friendship between Mr. Lerner and John Paul Austin, chairman of Coca-Cola, that led to the deal and touted its participation as a contribution to the Bicentennial, the company has refused to discuss the matter since the show closed on May 3.

Nevertheless, the loss of its investment in the production undoubtedly had an effect on the huge soft-drink company, whose very name is an image of America. In fact, by the time that the show opened in New York, after poor reviews out-of-town, Coke had removed its name from the program and obviously began disassociating itself from the project.

One million dollars on a long shot may not seem to be too large a figure to the management of Coca-Cola—which spent about $75 million last year for advertising alone. But some stockholders may look at this investment in the Broadway theater with less approving eyes.

"It goes to show that there's no such thing as a sure investment in either the stock market or in show business," said Wilma Soss, president of the Federation of Women Shareholders in American Business. "It will be interesting to see how they write this off. Will they put it under advertising, education or charity?"

Knowledgeable theater people say that the investment by Coca-Cola marked the first time that a large industrial corporation not connected with show business had backed all or a substantial part of a Broadway show. Companies have, of course, contributed in the past to nonprofit theatrical ventures, in New York and elsewhere, but those were not attempts to pick a winner instead of a flop.

For example, the Xerox Corporation gave $400,000 to the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington to help create the American Bicentennial Theater for the 1975-76 season. Eight of the 10 scheduled plays have already been produced—including "The Royal Family" and "Sweet Bird of Youth"—and some of the successful ones were taken over by commercial producers for presentation on Broadway.

The companies that have put funds into Broadway plays or musicals, however, have been primarily entertainment-oriented, with divisions operating in the broadcasting, motion-picture or record industries. And the most successful of these ventures was undoubtedly the decision by CBS Inc. to invest in a musical called "My Fair Lady."

CBS put up the whole $350,000 cost to mount the Alan Jay Lerner-Fredrick Loewe show in 1965—and that landmark in the musical theater, which ran for 2,717 performances, proved to be the best single investment ever made by the company. It has since earned $30 million in pretax profits from this musical story from a variety of sources: the show itself, the original-cast album and the sale of motion picture and television rights.

In the years after "My Fair Lady" brought CBS its bonanza the giant movie companies became more and more involved with Broadway. While some investments were in straight plays, most were in musicals that had a potential for becoming blockbuster films.

"If a movie company invested in a new script, it could wind up spending $1 million to $1.25 million," said Bernard B. Jacobs, president of the Shubert Organization. "We might get the same kind of test for half the budget."

Obviously, not all of these tests paid off. Columbia Pictures Industries put money into "Georgy" in 1970, but the show closed after four performances. United Artists Corporation invested in "Any" in 1965, but it ran for only 16 performances.

Paramount Pictures Corporation was the sole backer of "Coco" which opened in 1969, and just about recouped its $800,000-plus investment after the road tour that followed the Broadway run. The company was also a major investor in "Thieves" in 1974—putting up approximately $200,000 of the amount needed to stage the nonmusical—but despite a 312-performance run, it suffered a loss.

Broadcasters, too, have been reluctant theatrical investors. NBC backed "Call Me Madam" and "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." The American Broadcasting Companies investments include "Mack and Mabel," which ran for 65 performances, and "Dreyfus in 'Rehearsal," which ran for 12.

Record companies, like movie makers, have often been reluctant backers of musicals—doing so only when necessary to obtain the valuable option to cut the original-cast album.

The 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation put hundreds of thousands of dollars into the production of "Coco" and advertising expenses of "The Wiz," but turned down the record rights. They were picked up later by Atlantic Records, a division of Warner Communications Inc., which has been making a steady profit on the album since shortly after the show opened, early in 1975.

RCA Records—like NBC, a division of the RCA Corporation—made a $90,000 investment in "Tex," which opened last month to mixed reviews. But it also invested in "Hello Dolly!" prior to the opening in 1964, and that one ran for 2,844 performances.

Motown Records put $200,000 into "Pippin," which has been running for more than two years, and $400,000 into "The Baker's Wife," which is scheduled to open on Broadway next fall.

As this catalogue of corporate investments in the legitimate theater indicates, the chances are much greater of choosing a miss than a hit. But despite these odds and the "1600 Pennsylvania Avenue" failure, Broadway entrepreneurs expect to step up their efforts to interest corporations—industrial and entertainment—in backing new plays, musicals and revivals.

As Mr. Jacobs of the Shubert Organization put it: "We're most anxious to see this area of financing developed. There is no place in the world where you can make as much money as a Broadway hit. And the return can go up to 100-to-1."

CHANNELS A $6 admission entitles the public to attend tonight at 8 P.M. the opening event of a four-day Near Eastern Literature Conference intermingling unfamiliar, major writers of Iran, Israel, Turkey and the Arab countries with well-known American writers in discussions of mutual concern. The assembly is sponsored by the P.E.N. American Center and Princeton University, where the conference shifts for more scholarly sessions on the last two days.

Tonight's program includes readings by Near Eastern writers and translations, with a reception following and a welcoming address by Muriel Rukeyser. The place is the Trustees Room of the New York Public Library, Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street. Reservations are mandatory, at 265-1977, as they are for tomorrow's free events.

Starting at 10 A.M. at the Graduate Center of City University, 33 West 42d Street, Arthur Miller will introduce a survey of contemporary Near Eastern writings moderated by John Updike. Other aspects will be discussed at 2 P.M. with Jerzy Kosinski moderating; and at 3:30 P.M. with Elizabeth Hardwick. Simultaneous programs at the library will feature a subject of poetry at 2 P.M. with W. S. Merwin; and theater and dramatic writing at 3:30 P.M. with Edward Albee.

SALT AIRS Tonight at 7:30, the rollicking quartet of singing sailors called the X-Sea-men's Institute and Benjie Klay will start their annual series of two-hour, Tuesday songests, with the audiences joining in, on Pier 15 of the South Street Seaport, Fulton Street and the East River. The tab is $2 for adults and $1 for children. For comfort, bring pillows or chairs.

LUNCH & LEARNING "The Price of Independence: 1776" is today's lecture nourished in the noon programs at Pace University, across the park from City Hall. The speaker is Thomas Jones, director of community relations for Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, it's $1.50 for the lecture and $3.50 for both feed and talk.

FREE AND READY "Leger and Art of the 1920's" is tonight's lecture at Yale University, at the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum, 1071 Fifth Avenue.

Irma Regell, harpsichordist scholar and member of City University's York College, plays today at 1 P.M. in the midday series at Richmond College Hall, 130 Shuyesant Place on Staten Island.

A program of medieval feast music is scheduled for 3 P.M. today in the Finley Ballroom of City College, Convent Avenue and 138th Street.

and rhythmic American-style music in midtown, a trio of young entertainers known as the First Congress might be paying a Bicentennial tribute. They don't say so. The trio is too busy singing and playing on 10 different instruments, often shifting or doubling up in mid-number.

The First Congress performs in the front cocktail lounge of Joe's Pier 52, the nautical restaurant at 144 West 52d Street (alongside the Americana Hotel). In this snugly intimate oasis, the threesome is quite literally on deck, perched high behind the S-shaped bar and sharing the spotlight with a spectacular wall swordfish. The players are Steve and David Appel, brothers, and Celeste Appel, Steve's wife.

The other night after the theater—a couple of vodka-and-tonics were $2 each at a table—the trio was ranging from nostalgia ("I Only Knew Eyes for You") to contemporary, such as "Feelings," the "Love Story" theme, "What I Did for Love" (from "A Chorus Line") and two songs by Kris Kristofferson.

"We're from Ohio," David Appel told the responsive patrons, "and this is our first New York engagement—a little different from farm country. Just keep your requests coming." They move to Las Vegas this summer. The First Congress performs tonight except Sunday from 7 P.M. to 1 A.M. There is no cover or minimum charge in the Pier 52 Lounge.

Shorts Scrambling for Maine Potatoes

By ROBERT METZ

Frantic trading in May potato futures on May 7, when the contracts expired, wiped out many traders who were long on Maine "round whites" and apparently sent short sellers scrambling for $10 million worth of potatoes.

Under the rules of the New York Mercantile Exchange, where the futures are traded, the shorts must deliver the potatoes before May 25. The exchange is investigating to see if anything unusual took place that would explain the large number of open contracts.

Few traders like to make or take delivery, and most contracts at the end of contract periods—whether November, March, April or May—are covered through a matching of orders.

Futures, regardless of the commodity involved, are traded by both hedgers and speculators. The hedgers are businessmen and farmers who use the futures market to protect themselves against adverse price fluctuations in their normal market channels.

A Maine farmer, for example, by selling short at a specified price, assures himself of an acceptable price regardless of subsequent change. A speculator attempts to profit by anticipating the rise or fall of prices and assumes the risk the hedger wishes to avoid.

The number of contracts left to be delivered was surpassed only by the 1,939 contracts left open in May 1964. Between 1969 and 1975, the largest number of May contracts left unmatched totaled 248—in 1970, in 1975, only 79 contracts remained to be delivered on the closing date.

The massive short position for May represents 55 million pounds of potatoes, some of which would have to be delivered over the antiquated tracks of the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad. Even the facilities in the Harlem River yards that handle New York deliveries are "on their last legs," as one observer puts it.

Meanwhile, it is rumored that the shorts have offered to deliver the long, flat russet potatoes from Idaho or other Western states. The idea dismisses those who were long on May contracts and were wiped out on the final day of trading because of the heavy positions entered into by the shorts and the closing out of long positions.

Verdict Is Reversed For Eastern Airlines

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit at New Orleans yesterday reversed a Florida Federal court jury verdict that granted $24.8 million to Eastern Airlines in connection with late delivery of 99 jet airplanes by the McDonnell Douglas Corporation. The court sent the case back to the Miami court for a new trial.

United Technologies In Iran Oil Talks

The United Technologies Corporation confirmed yesterday at Hartford that it has been holding discussions with Iran on the possibility of an oil barter arrangement in exchange for military items. A spokesman said his company had been approached by Iran and that "preliminary discussions" had been held. He would not identify products involved nor comment on the status of the talks. Other United States producers of military hardware have reported similar offers.

These include the General Dynamics Corporation, the Boeing Company and the Northrop Corporation. The Pratt & Whitney Aircraft unit of United Technologies builds the engines that power the F-14 fighter that is built by the Grumman Corporation. Iran has ordered 80 of these planes. Another United Technologies unit, Sikorsky Aircraft, is hoping to make a major helicopter sale to Iran soon.

FANSTEEL'S BOARD BACKS SIEGLER BID

Fansteel stock rose 3 1/2 points to 22 1/2 yesterday as one of the best-percentage gainers on the New York Stock Exchange.

Lear Siegler of Santa Monica, Calif., is a diversified manufacturer of electronics, communications equipment, vehicle components, construction and industrial equipment. In the year to June 30, 1975, it had sales of $642.5 million. Fansteel, a manufacturer of specialty metals and carbide tools, earned $1.4 million in 1975 on sales of $87 million.

Edward P. Evans, chairman of H. K. Porter, said yesterday that he had no comment on the Lear-Siegler offer for Fansteel.

The American Can Company announced yesterday that it signed a $45 million dollar agreement with the U.S. Reduction Company under which U.S. Reduction becomes a wholly owned subsidiary of American Can.

Under the agreement, which the American Can board approved March 26, American Can will exchange 0.7 share of its stock for each of the 1.8 million shares of U.S. Reduction common stock outstanding.

American Can, one of the nation's largest producers of metal cans, also makes paper-packing materials and chemicals. In 1974, it earned $100.1 million on sales of $2.65 billion. U.S. Reduction, which produces aluminum alloys, earned $8.01 million on sales of $171.7 million in 1974.

Empire Gas Enjoined On Offer for Pargas

The Federal District Court in Baltimore granted a temporary injunction yesterday against the Empire Gas Corporation's tender offer for Pargas Inc. common stock.

offered to pay $18.50 a share for 2 million shares of Pargas. The Pargas board urged shareholders to reject the offer, saying that owners of 43 percent of Pargas shares have informed Pargas that they will not tender their shares at the $18.50 a share price.

PENNEY REPORTS SHARP RECOVERY

ing 1973-1975, Mr. Seibert told the meeting. The practice of making these payments, he said, was established by local management "apparently following local practices." Neither the payments nor the benefits from them "were material in relation to the sales, earnings, assets or business of the company," he added. Penney does not consider that the payments termination will have an adverse effect, he said. Mr. Seibert, who volunteered the information about the foreign payments in his formal address, would not give further details. Despite a stockholder query, he declined to identify three Penney executives who were recently discharged for misuse of funds.

Commenting on the first-quarter results, he said that both full-line and soft-line Penney stores and catalogue operations were the main contributors to the profit improvement. However, the company's Treasury discount stores and supermarket company, Supermarkets Interstate, both continued to register losses, mainly because of sales declines. In addition, Penney's unconsolidated subsidiaries, primarily insurance operations, had a 54.8 percent earnings drop, mostly because of continued underwriting losses in casualty insurance.

Asked by Roger Coolidge, a shareholder, whether Penney's should not get out of the supermarket business, Mr. Seibert explained that the company had bought the supermarket chain that operated the food leases in the Treasury stores so that "we could have full control of that part of the business, too."

This announcement is neither an offer to sell nor a solicitation of an offer to buy these securities. The offer is made only by the Prospectus.

Expert judgment in municipal bonds...

We have never failed to give a client a bid for a municipal bond we sold him.

Sometimes this is a difficult commitment but we always stand behind it. Maintaining a bid for the bonds we sell is our most important policy.

Because if we may own our client's portfolio ourselves someday, we will want to be sure that it is well diversified and that our best judgment was used in selecting the bonds in it.

We think of this as "complete cycle philosophy." The commitment to buy back any bond we've sold makes all our other commitments necessary.

And we are determined not to let saleability, availability or profitability change our mind.

Britain Says North Sea Oil Is Below Original Goals

By GENE SMITH
North Sea oil production is surpassing forecasts made a year ago but is still nowhere near so substantial as expected originally by this time, Lord Balogh, deputy chairman of the British National Oil Corporation, said in a recent interview in New York.

annual rate of 301,500 barrels a day, whereas last year we did not expect more than 201,000 barrels a day." He added that "we hope to reach the full production of 400,000 barrels a day by 1978." This would have a value of about $2.5 billion, he explained, based on current price estimates.

Earlier estimates indicated that Britain might be producing 1.5 million barrels a day by 1978.

Throughout the interview, Lord Balogh stated that the British Government wanted to negotiate "voluntary participation agreements" with the oil companies in the North Sea.

The oil companies for their part generally feel that they entered into North Sea exploration under one set of rules and that now that the gamble has paid off the British Government is trying to change the rules.

He insisted that pessimism over North Sea oil was "completely unjustified," nothing that "we have some nice new results—production and reserve figures are both up 30 percent so there's no reason to be despondent."

The official added that the major oil companies had good reason to express such views—"the more pessimistic they are, the better they hope to do in the next round of negotiations," he said. "In their place, I would not act differently."

Oil was first discovered in the British sector of the North Sea in October 1970. The discovery was made by the British Petroleum Company in a field called the Forties.

The size of foreign banks subject to the bill was raised to $1 billion from $500 million, but this was said to have no present practical effect since all those operating in this country now have assets of at least $1 billion.

Left unchanged was a provision that foreign banks be prohibited from engaging in non-banking activities in this country. However, those activities that were engaged in as of Dec. 3, 1974—the date of introduction of legislation originally proposed by the Federal Reserve—could be continued through the end of 1985.

Foreign banks would be allowed to continue to underwrite securities in this country, but they could not sell or distribute them, except to the extent allowed national banks here. That is, underwriting is "grandfathered," but distribution is not.

Foreign banks must also post a surety deposit with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, but they are not required to become members.

In a recent speech before the New York World Financial Center meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, he had explained in detail the present situation.

"The oil companies have directly benefited by the various—especially regional advantages—vouchsafed by the Government. So far as tax is concerned, the structure of British petroleum taxation is a steeply progressive excess-profits tax."

"It does not impinge on the companies before not merely the whole of their investment but 175 percent of the cost has been written off. Finally, if revenue in any one year does not reach 30 percent of actual investment, there is no liability for petroleum tax," he explained.

This gives a tax-free return of almost double the general industrial profit rate over a longish period. The Secretary of State can waive the royalty in part or in full for marginal fields that in spite of these concessions do not prove commercial.

"It is probable that the better fields will be amortized in two to three years at most. The risk of exposure is reduced to levels totally unheard of in the rest of industry or, indeed, the economy."

"This heavy forward-loading of expenditure, coupled with complete freedom to write off, has made the British North Sea one of the most, if not the most, favorable investment opportunities."

Oil was first discovered in the British sector of the North Sea in October 1970. The discovery was made by the British Petroleum Company in a field called the Forties.

Commercial production began in November 1975 and Britain expects to be self-sufficient in oil by the 1980's.

The British energy adviser pointed out that his Government was interested in negotiating participation agreements with the oil companies in an effort to obtain needed expertise as well as supplies of oil.

year, on the consolidated tape, where business is transacted until 5:30 P.M., Eastern daylight time.

Transway International, the nation's largest freight forwarder, formerly known as United States Freight, fell 1 1/2 to 22 1/2 after reporting a slight gain in quarterly profits. The amount of the increase evidently disappointed some followers of the stock.

California Financial dropped 1 1/2 to 5 1/2 after a tentative agreement for its acquisition by another savings and loan company was called off.

But most components of the Dow industrials, composed of 30 leading corporations, showed declines. Sears, Roebuck fell a point to 67 1/2, despite its announcement of improved quarterly earnings.

Baker Industries, a leading producer of fertilizer, dropped 1 1/2 to 9 1/2 and set a new low for the year in response to critical comments in a financial publication. Baker was one of the few stocks that doubled in 1974, a disastrous year for the stock market but a boom year for fertilizer producers.

Big Dow volume, at 14.72 million shares, was the third lowest for the year. Nationwide trading in all issues listed on the Big Board dropped to 17.83 million shares from Friday's 19.78 million shares.

that Mr. Craugh had consented to a court order directing him to give up his profits, without admitting or denying the allegations in the complaint.

Mr. Craugh, a registered representative with Moore & Schley for about 10 years, was described in the complaint as having bought 12,200 shares of Aircro for himself and for his customers at prices ranging from $22 1/2 to $25 1/2 a share without disclosing material information to the public about the impending tender offer. Mr. Ayoub, who left Moore & Schley in April after one year, was described as having bought 4,300 shares of Aircro for himself and for his customers at prices from $23 1/2 to $26 1/2 without disclosing the required information.

The Aircro tender offer for Unitek is scheduled to expire Thursday. Unitek Discloses Suit In a separate development yesterday, the Unitek Corporation said that Moore & Schley had filed suit in Federal court in Los Angeles to block Aircro's attempted takeover bid. The company said in its action that Aircro had violated Federal securities law, but declined further comment on the suit.

When Aircro offered $30 a share two weeks ago, Unitek advised its stockholders that the offer was "unrealistically low."

In today's money market, the Pyramid can give you solid advice.

In the money market, "the wisdom of the Pyramid" is no idle phrase. The Pyramid, as you may know, has been the symbol of Bankers Trust for over 60 years. And for most of that time we've been actively engaged in the money market—in municipal bonds and government securities since World War I, in foreign exchange for 50 years.

Our experience has led us to establish something special in American banking: a Money Center. This is a single, huge trading area, complete with electronic quote board, 100 telephones and tie lines to everywhere. Here we have 90 traders, salesmen, support people, our own money market economist and our foreign exchange traders—all in the same room.

All of whom are continually in touch with their customers, with other traders here and abroad—and with each other. Which means that a customer who might normally hear only about treasury bills, might also get to hear about opportunities in, say, mortgage backed bonds. Government bonds, tax-exempt, CD's, Eurodollars—whatever the big news of the moment, domestic or international, it is flashed around this room.

Given this system, it's not surprising that our salesmen are more than salesmen. In fact, they act primarily as market advisors to help you improve your portfolio performance. If you could use this kind of instant exposure to a wide range of investment options, visit the Pyramid.

In fact, wherever you see our symbol, you'll be dealing with a full service bank in the fullest sense of the word, with the capacity to raise, lend and manage money worldwide. A trip to the Pyramid can be a rewarding experience.

Ally's Fiat Crew Wins Awards

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY Fiat, Carl Ally Inc., Anni Gargano and David Aitschler roared together to glory last night at the third annual One Show, the city's most prestigious advertising competition. It was at the Americana Hotel. The trophies are called simply the Gold Award and the Silver Award and Mr. Gargano, executive vice president and creative director of Carl Ally, and Mr. Aitschler, senior vice president and creative group head, each got five golds as art director and copywriter, respectively, of ads for Fiat Distributors, which handles the Italian-made automobile.

Anni Gargano

They won in the newspaper category, consumer magazine campaign, small space newspaper and magazine ads, 30-second single TV commercial, and 30-second TV campaign. It was the biggest haul by two individuals since the Art Directors Club and the Copy Club got together in 1973 to sponsor the joint effort. And it is rare indeed for an agency to pick up so many awards in any of the many competitions for a single client.

Now, you may ask, what does all this glory for the agency mean to Fiat? Would you settle for a 39.5 percent retail sales increase from 72,029 cars in 1974 to 100,511 in 1975. Maybe good advertising does work.

The best five other agencies could do in multiple gold award acquisition, were two each. They were Doyle Dane Bernbach; Levine, Huntley, Schmidt, Plapler & Beaver; McCann-Erickson; Scali, McCabe, Sloves, and Young & Rubicam.

Allan Beaver, art director, and Larry Plapler, writer, for Levine, Huntley, last year's big winners, got two each for their efforts in behalf of Matchbox toys from Lesney Products.

And three Young & Rubicam writers, Bert Berdis, Dick Orkin and Woody Woodruff, each got double golds for Time magazine advertising. No art directors? Right. It was radio advertising.

Both of Doyle Dane's victories were for Volkswagen and Michael Mangano, a writer, picked up two golds. One each, went to Robert Levenson, also for writing, and to Harriet Krons and John Caggiano for art direction.

Four McCann-Erickson art directors and one writer received Gold Awards for the Exxon 60-second TV campaign—Ken Demme, John Jenkins, Gavino Sama, Don Tortorello and Nick Piscane. And Richard Brown, art director, and Steve August, writer, were honored for their public service ad for the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation.

Scali, McCabe, Sloves, which took six Gold Awards in 1973, got one for Perdue's chickens and the other for Barney's last night. Sam Scali, art director, and Ed McCabe, writer, got the chicken prize and Carl Stewart and Joan McArthur won with the men's clothing.

All in all there were 43 Gold and 42 Silver Awards distributed and some of them, as is the custom of the Art Directors Club, went to areas of design outside of advertising consumer and trade publication editorial design; graphic design, such as packaging and direct mail pieces, photography and illustration. Starting tomorrow and running through June 4 there will be an exhibition of 390 entries in the One Show competition at One Dag Hammarskjold Plaza.

Grey's Quarter Net Up 146.6% Grey Advertising Inc. has reported that for the first quarter ended March 31, net income rose 146.6 percent. Gross income was $12.4 million, up 11.7 percent over a year ago. Net income came to $392,000, or 33 cents a share, compared with 13 cents in 1975.

The agency also announced that it had concluded the purchase of 263,000 shares of its common stock—roughly 22 percent of the outstanding stock—from Lawrence Valenstein and Arthur C. Fatt, founder of the agency.

The transaction, which involved cash and short-term notes came to approximately $2.9 million. Mr. Fatt and Mr. Valenstein also resigned from the board, but retained the honorary positions of Founder-Chairmen.

Borden Links Up Spot Buying Borden Foods, hoping to gain clout when buying television advertising time, has consolidated the buying function in two of its seven agencies.

Bozell & Jacobs, Chicago, will be in charge of buying all time during network children's programming, while Grey Advertising will handle all of the rest of network buying and spot buying as well.

The division of Borden Inc. probably spends about $6 million a year in network and a like amount in spot.

Navy's Bates Contract Upheld The Comptroller General of the United States has ruled that the Navy properly awarded a Navy recruiting contract to Ted Bates & Company last September.

The decision stemmed from a bid protest filed by Grey Advertising after learning that Bates had won the account. The budget for fiscal year 1976, which began last July, was reported to be $12.5 million.

People William O. Boris and John J. Powers have been named vice president management directors of Leo Burnett U.S.A., Chicago.

John P. Walsh has been named to the new position of director of advertising services at Lehn & Fink Products Company. Bernard W. Recknagel, executive vice president-marketing and communications for the St. Regis Paper Company, taking early retirement, effective July 1. Thomas L. Elliott Jr. has joined the Hertz Corporation as vice president, public affairs.

CAPITAL OUTFLOW CONTINUING HIGH

lated by changes in United States official monetary reserve assets and in foreign holdings of dollars.

But now that floating exchange rates prevail, changes in foreign dollar holdings are a matter of discretion by foreign central banks trying to influence the movement of their own currencies, and thus are no longer a clear measure of the pressure on the dollar or a net outflow of funds from the United States. Thus the report now omits the balance as not meaningful.

Today's report, therefore, disclosed what is now known about the many types of inflows and outflows in transactions with foreigners, chiefly export-import trade in goods and most kinds of capital flows. The rest of the transaction, insofar as they can be recorded, will be reported a month from now, but once again no overall surplus or deficit in the balance of payments will be calculated.

As previously reported, the nation's merchandise trade was in deficit in the first quarter, by $1.6 billion as calculated in the balance of payments accounts. There was a big jump of $2.9 billion in imports over the fourth quarter, associated with the strong expansion of the domestic economy, and a modest drop of $862 million in exports.

The following were some highlights of the nation's capital transactions, as recorded so far:

Purchases of foreign securities newly issued in the United States, mainly from Canada, rose almost $300 million to $2.9 billion. These were almost exclusively bond issues.

Bank loans to foreigners, including both long-term and short-term, increased by $3.7 billion in the first quarter, less than the $4.8 billion rise in these claims in the fourth quarter of last year.

The report today also commented on the movements of the dollar in the foreign exchange markets during the first quarter, in line with the new reporting format on the nation's international transactions. It said that "large first quarter swings in the value of the U.S. dollar against several major currencies were related to special developments abroad rather than changes in the position of the dollar."

Investment Tax Incentives Held Essential

James A. Baker 3d, former Under Secretary of Commerce, asserted yesterday that investment tax incentives are essential if American industry is to be capable of meeting strong competition for world markets. Mr. Baker, who resigned two weeks ago to become deputy chairman of the campaign committee of President Ford, told the annual World Trade Day luncheon that the country's exporters face a hard struggle against aggressive trade credit and tax policies of other countries. He added: "Unless we get tax reforms that will once again provide the necessary incentives to invest in new technology and modernization, other nations are going to catch up and surpass us in the ability to capture world markets. Imports are considered a threat to jobs now, what will happen when other nations beat us out in productivity and begin to consistently outsell us in our own market?"

James A. Baker 3d, former Under Secretary of Commerce, asserted yesterday that investment tax incentives are essential if American industry is to be capable of meeting strong competition for world markets.

Mr. Baker, who resigned two weeks ago to become deputy chairman of the campaign committee of President Ford, told the annual World Trade Day luncheon that the country's exporters face a hard struggle against aggressive trade credit and tax policies of other countries. He added: "Unless we get tax reforms that will once again provide the necessary incentives to invest in new technology and modernization, other nations are going to catch up and surpass us in the ability to capture world markets. Imports are considered a threat to jobs now, what will happen when other nations beat us out in productivity and begin to consistently outsell us in our own market?"

John F. McGuffee, president of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, said yesterday that the slow pace of the nation's economic recovery would produce a relatively high savings rate and a moderate rise in credit needs. These trends will enable the Treasury to satisfy its borrowing requirements without pushing interest rates into double digits, he told an American Banking Association conference at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The bank executive forecast a continued gradual up-trend in short-term interest rates, with long-term rates and the yields on top grade corporate bonds probably trading around 8 percent after mid-year. These bonds currently are trading around 8.3 to 8.65 percent. He added that banks could expect increased loan demand and improved earnings before the end of the year.

George W. Blackwood, formerly executive vice president of W. R. Grace & Company, has been elected to the new post of vice chairman of the international chemical company. Mr. Blackwood, who is 61, will continue as chief operating officer. William Seidman, special assistant to the President for economic affairs, said yesterday that, despite a recent rise of wholesale prices, the Administration continues to hold to its forecast of an inflation rate slightly under 6 percent for 1976. The White House economist, who is traveling in Europe, said at a news conference in London that the recent upward movement of metal prices in the United States was still within the 5 percent to 6 percent inflation forecast for the year. He added, however, that "we are watching the price movements closely." The United States inflation rate in the first quarter of the year was slightly below 3 percent on an annual basis, while the upturn in the wholesale-price index, which occurred in April, amounted to 0.8 percent. Mr. Seidman commented that the 3 percent inflation rate in the first quarter was not one the Administration had any great confidence in maintaining for the rest of the year.

Because we haven't let our up-to-date accommodations spoil some very old fashioned ideas we have on hospitality. We have built larger inns, we have updated our facilities, we can accommodate groups of 1,000 with modern meeting rooms and the latest audio visual equipment. But our traditional hospitality is as it was over 80 years ago. Good old New England hospitality, symbolized by the bowl of red apples at our front desks. Lemon-scented soap in every room, rocking chairs and homespun touches. In our dining rooms traditional New England specialties including clam chowder, Indian pudding, and lobster pie. That's why businessmen return to our inns again and again. SHARON STEEL BID SET FOR FOREMOST quisition-minded men in American business. In 1969 Forbes Magazine described him as an "errant genius" and pointed out that despite falling sales and rising deficits he had been able to build "a $15 million fortune." The article pointed out that he preferred working at home—preferably in his bedroom—in a $250,000 Miami Beach home. Mr. Posner was recently identified as one of three suitors for The Farmers Bank of Delaware. William W. Morrison, president and chief executive of Foremost-McKesson, said yesterday: "We are well aware that Victor Posner has been buying stock in our company, but this is the first indication that he's not buying for investment purposes only, as previously announced."

Urban Environment Aerial Tram Ride to Roosevelt Island Is Opened With a Splash—on O'Dwyer

Roosevelt Island Is Exhilarating Now, Status as Community Is Years Off

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

ing not common at ining to emerge on Island—a sense of intelligent design new urban environ- t is genuinely con- vancing. The is- land, where the New York State Urban Development Corporation has been at work 9, has had its share construction delays ical problems that non to building in k. And it is impos- make a final judg- a residential com- ntil it has been oc- some years.

the moment and in oints, the construc- island in the East more than conyive- exhilarating. Design s finally been har- produce an urban real quality in New particularly at this e city's history, that for rejecting.

are 2,145 apartment e first stage of the d given the U.D.C.'s fiscal situation, there likely to be any nstructed for some overver successful igital sections are. nments are arranged d buildings on both the island with the s of the U's facing

The Johansen & Bhavnani buildings are much drabber to look at, largely as a result of an experiment with a new facing material, a cement-asbestos panel called Corspan. While from a distance it gives the buildings a certain sober grayness appropriate the New York Skyline, close up, it makes for facades that are depressingly flat and dreary.

Spectacular Views

The panels, which can be hung from within the structure, permitted considerable economies, however, and the architects say that money was thus freed for other uses.

so, it has been put to good use—the apartments are decent in both Island House a middle-income rental building, and Rivercross, a luxury cooperative.

Indeed, there is a well-planned two-bedroom apartment at the end of the Island House—U, with a bedroom that feels as if it were jutting out over the water, and has views up and down the river that makes it one of the most spectacular medium-sized apartments built in New York in years.

The exterior open spaces are pleasing here, too, and one part of Island House—a landscaped and paved plaza with a restored church as its centerpiece—is as fine a civic square as any neighborhood in the city can claim. It is dignified, yet relaxing and attractive; it has the church as an anchor and the controlled drama of glimpses of the river through openings underneath one wing of Island House.

Indeed, it is in urban gestures such as this that Roosevelt Island makes its most significant contribution. There is a delightful park just south of the large Sert complex; it contains fine open views of the 59th Street bridge and surrounds the Blackwell House, the 1789 farmhouse that, like the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, was restored for island use by Giorgio Cavaglieri.

A Pleasant Interlude

And Main Street has the potential of becoming one of the city's most pleasurable, if briefest, urban experiences. Its bends and curves are just enough to provide interest, but not so much to be cute, and the paving brick here is a welcome change from asphalt.

The Sert buildings have an arcade, which unfortunately removes storefronts from streetside but compensates by providing covered vistas of surprising drama; the Johansen buildings zig-zag in and out from the street's edge, teasing at breaking away, but respecting the street nonetheless.

The stores, not to mention the apartments themselves, are only gradually filling up, and it will be some time before the island has the population it needs to really work. (Only one of the small experimental schools, which are set in each apartment complex, is open yet, for example.)

But there is enough functioning on Roosevelt Island already to suggest that this experiment seems likely to work. One of the most encouraging pieces of evidence is that, of the occupants of the island thus far, 50 percent come from outside the city, and 60 percent of that group consists of suburbanites who have come back to town to settle on the island.

Here on Roosevelt Island, then, the dream of Edward Logue, the original chairman of the Urban Development Corporation, to "go beyond conventional housing solutions" may have found a broad audience.

By FRED FERRETTI

Aerial tramway service connecting Manhattan with the city's newest urban community on Roosevelt Island was formally inaugurated yesterday with champagne and public expressions of hope for the city's future.

But, as usually happens with historic occurrences here, the ceremonies quickly became informal and a backdrop for a series of those awkward municipal embarrassments so dear to the hearts of New Yorkers.

The opening of the 3,100-foot connection between the East Side and the city's still-abundant "New Town" in the East River was marked by Mayor Beame, who welcomed the first skyriders to "Roosevelt Avenue," and then smashed a bottle of New York State champagne against one of the two trams, drenching City Council President Paul O'Dwyer, hap to knee.

With service beginning at 6 o'clock this morning the island will have a direct mass-transit link to Manhattan, a link that previously consisted of a tortuous bus ride from the island over a bridge to Astoria, then back across the Queensborough Bridge. Though the ride was free during the tramway construction, and the 3.5-minute tramway ride will cost 50 cents or a transit token, the people waiting for Mayor Beame yelled with delight when the tramway was dedicated.

First Driver

The first tram was driven by Christopher Devina, a laid-off city fireman who told every body he had been hired because he knew so much about "rescue procedures" but who hastened to add, "we'll never have to use them."

Along with him for the ride as an assistant was Jim Sweeney, a laid-off policeman, who said he had recently been hired to drive and to maintain the 3,100-foot tramway after "trying to get on welfare." Not with him was Lieut. Gov. Mary Arme Krupsak, who was supposed to represent Governor Carey at the festivities but who missed the tram.

Edward Logue, former chairman of the Urban Development Corporation, which planned and built the Roosevelt Island community as well as the $6.5 million tramway, but who was forced to resign when the U.D.C. defaulted a year ago, was on hand, and was repeatedly praised as "Roosevelt Island's man of vision."

Theodore Dudl, Swiss Consul General in New York, was on hand with an engineer from the Von Roll Company of Bern, which built the tramway, and he said the tramway was ideal "like the cableways in Disneyland—both Disneyland." And the engineer, Rene Friedrich, said there were "no problems" with the aerial service although it might take "four or five days to get a few bugs

The public relations concern hired to make certain that the day was festive kept sending people around telling everyone that the champagne being sipped on the moving tramway was Chateau Martin, "made in New York," that what was to be served later in Blackwell Park was New York State domestic as well, and that the Dixieland band on hand at the 60th Street and Second Avenue tram station, which had a drum saying "Manufacturers Trust Loves Roosevelt Island," was "made up of volunteers."

Municipal Joy

It was that kind of a day, but overlooking it all was a kind of municipal joy, a delight in the fact that the tramway was finally opening after a series of false starts and rescinded dates. When Mayor Beame and the first group in Car One landed at the Roosevelt Island station, for example, a crowd of about 200 people were on hand, some of them wearing T-shirts emblazoned with "Roosevelt Island, The Little Apple," others carrying signs reading "The Tramway Is Super," "Mayor Beame I Like You and Your Tramway," and "It's Fun to Ride the Tramway."

Currently, 1,000 people live on Roosevelt Island in the Island House, Westview and Eastwood houses. By the end of this year, it is anticipated, the population will double.

Eventually, it is planned that 5,000 families will live on the island, which already has a delicatessen, a stationery store, a New York Telephone sales office and a bank. Leases have been signed for a liquor store— to be run by Eleanor Sesse and her husband, Archie, who poored yesterday's champagne—a restaurant, a dry cleaner and a pharmacy.

Mayor Beame told the crowd that it was "the only aerial tramway for urban transportation in the United States and it proves as always that New York is first." He called it "a streetcar in the sky" and said it was one of the city's major achievements of the year—the others being Operation Sail and the July 4 planned festival, the continuing Bicentennial observances and the Democratic National Convention.

Mr. O'Dwyer promised the islanders that the city would soon provide "regular consular service," and Brian Walder a 12-year-old student of Roosevelt Island's Intermediate School 217 read the official welcome to the Mayor and his party.

The Christening

Then it was time for the official christening. Mr. Beame was given the bottle of New York State champagne, and he leaned over the yellow iron guard rail, facing the red, gray and chrome tram.

"Ready?" he asked the U.D.C. crowd.

"Ready," he answered.

"Ready?" he asked the news photographers.

"Ready."

He swung the bottle and it burst with a great splash, gushing over Mr. O'Dwyer.

The City Council President, a politician with as much aplomb as anyone in the business, reached to his suit front, drew his finger across the wetness, put it into his mouth with a sipping sound, then said.

"Finger Lakes district. Definitely. And dry."

The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company has been practicing 91 years to get ready for tonight.

They've been doing "The Mikado" since it opened in 1885. So by now you can bet they've got it down pat. In fact, you might say the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company is the benchmark for Gilbert & Sullivan. But see for yourself. See it tonight at 9 p.m., Friday at 10 p.m. or Saturday at 2 p.m. This WNET presentation is made possible by a grant from Manufacturers Hanover.

This week we're going to scare you to life.

This week on Eyewitness News, Dr. Storm Field explores the vocabulary and the inner workings of HBP—high blood pressure. What is it? What causes it? What do the numbers 120/80 mean? What's normal? What's hypertension? What's a stroke? Dr. Field will tell you what's being done for people with HBP. And how to find out if you're one of them. Another way you can find out is to visit our free Blood Pressure Clinic, which we've set up for this week only. With volunteer doctors from New York Hospital, Beth Israel and other local hospitals. Our special clinic at 60th Street & Fifth Avenue will test your blood pressure May 19-21 from 10 am to 4 pm, and May 22, 23 from 10 am to 6 pm. Our report will test you with a quiz on blood pressure that could start saving your life (if you knew all the answers).

Money Is Sought for Aged Poor

A new state legislative bill to provide for 400,000 aged, disabled poor in the city will receive a 6.4 percent increase July 1 Supplemental Security Income program was made mandatory by the Council of Greater New York.

profit research and a group said the bill's cost-of-living adjustments would be "a burden on the city's budget at the moment," the State Department of Social Services said. The present state law does not provide for passing on cost-of-living increases to recipients in New York City.

cy estimated that a would cost $45 million—half of which is state expense and by localities. Sixty the Supplemental income enrollees in or 240,000 people, New York City.

plea to Governor members of the Leg-; been endorsed by nity Service Society olie Charities of Susan K. Kinoy, di- gram services for nity Council, said. ral Department of Health, Education and Welfare formally announced last Thursday that the cost-of-living adjustments scheduled for July 1 under a 1972 law would be 6.4 percent. The maximum Federal monthly payment for individuals alone is to go up $10.10 from $157.70 to $167.80 and for couples the rise is to be $15.20 from $236.60 to $251.80.

But it is up to New York and nine other states, which make optional supplemental contributions to the uniform Federal guaranteed income for such aged, blind and disabled poor to decide whether to pass on the Federal increase or to take the money to reduce their own share.

3 Previous Increases

There have been three such cost-of-living Federal increases since the program was enacted. The individual maximum Federal payment went up from $130 a month to $140 as of Jan. 1, 1974, then to $146 as of July 1, 1974, and then to $157.70 last July 1, with similar rises for couples.

New York State enrollees generally benefited only by the 8 percent increase as of last July, under special legislation signed by Governor Carey July 31 after the state had withheld the first two Federal rises here.

With the state-local supplement, the Community Council said, the combined maximum benefit for an individual in the Supplemental Security Income in the state now is $218.55 a month. The council said this compared with its annual price survey that a moderate level of living in the city for a retired person over the age of 65, as of last October, required $378.

Miss Kinoy said the council was "fully aware of the state and city fiscal crisis," but noted that inflation had also caused food and utility bills to soar and appealed for legislative help before the current session adjourned.

the New York City Ballet dances nicely and somehow retains her composure.
'A Quiet War' by Neil Simon is set in Russia of 1912. A retiring general, played by Zero Mostel, and a retired admiral, played by Peter Ustinov, sit on a park bench and play argument-for-the-sake-of-argument games.

You can live with your family.

You may find the scene all too familiar when tempers flare and little things loom larger than life. The daily occurrence of "domestic squabbles" creates serious frustrations for all family members.

Is there a positive side to the family battleground? How are some parents and children finding a "better way" through special workshops? What is the significance of such new catch-phrases as accept feelings, limit choices, emotional first aid, and stop and erase?

Emmy-Winning Correspondent Dave Monsees brings you tonight's Survival Report in the news.

“You cannot bore people into buying your product.”

David Ogilvy.

Quite so, Mr. Ogilvy.

You, sir, have admirably demonstrated the art of interesting communication. From our first glimpse of your man with the eye patch, from the first tick of your famous clock, you have consistently provided the world with interesting advertising.

Publications cannot bore, either—or they soon vanish. So the hallmark of every successful daily, weekly, monthly has been the common ability to meet the needs, and hold the interest, of its chosen audience.

To our audience (and it numbers 4,600,000 every business day), The Journal is never boring.

The Journal is interesting, useful, instructive, explanatory, diverting, analytic, catalytic.

So The Journal exists, born anew each business day, as the essential source of news and information for American leadership.

Because our readers view The Journal with trust and confidence, they look upon advertising which appears in The Journal with a favorable eye—and with a marked predilection for acting upon that advertising.

Source: Simmons, 1974/75

The result?

Indeed, advertising in The Journal often works to a magnitude surprising even to the most seasoned—and most skeptical—of advertising practitioners.

All of which suggests the wisdom of advertising in The Wall Street Journal.

Mr. Ogilvy, founder of Ogilvy & Mather, now holds the title of Creative Head, International, with the firm. He lives in France and travels regularly to the various offices of the agency.
